From the Top / Jacqueline Houton

DEAR BOSTON...

AS A KID, MY BREATH WOULD ALWAYS catch a bit when the skyline started rising in the distance while we drove toward Boston. I was born here, but growing up I primarily knew the city through visits—which is to say, I didn't really know it at all, as much as I marveled at every soaring skyscraper and violet-windowed brownstone. But I always knew I wanted to live here.

Now, having done so for more than a decade (and having spent much of that time on the lifestyle beat), my knowledge of Boston is far more fine-tuned. But I realize there's always more to discover—mango-habanero ice cream so good you'll forget it's vegan, a sommelier who composes wine lists like a poet, a craftsman who's created wedding bands from a meteorite and even the secret nap room at Fenway Park, as revealed by our cover subject and MVP, David Ortiz. You'll encounter these and much more in our Boston's Best issue, featuring 269 awards that are written, edited, fact-checked, illustrated, laid out and proofed right around the time that many offices are setting up their "Summer Friday" auto-replies. Why do we do it? Because our staffers, our contributors and, most importantly, our readers love Boston, and every great relationship deserves an extravagant love letter once in a while.

DREAM WEAVER

AN ARTIST'S WORK HITS HOME.

IT'S BEEN A BIG YEAR FOR Janet Echelman. At the 30th anniversary TED Conference in March, the Brookline-based artist gave her second mainstage talk and unveiled her largest sculpture yet: Skies Painted with Unnumbered Sparks, a woven wonder stretching 745 feet between Vancouver skyscrapers. But she's already starting work on another milestone project—a major Boston commission, a first for an artist whose work has wowed crowds in Sydney and Singapore, Phoenix and Philadelphia, but not on her own home turf. "I've never had a chance to create a monumental work for my own community," Echelman says, "so it's very exciting to create a piece for the Boston Greenway." »»

HOLLY RIKE

WORLDWIDE WEBS: Echelman's work has been featured in many cities, including Vancouver, which hosted Skies Painted with Unnumbered Sparks this spring.

Looking Skyward

(continued from page 25) "I'm interested in knitting together the fabric of the city," says Echelman, whose proposal was recently selected by the Greenway Conservancy from an international pool of nearly 100 submissions. "Part of the impulse of the Big Dig and the creation of the Greenway was to offer the potential to bring the city back together. And my work will be a physical reconnection through ropes and twine."

Echelman first turned to such materials in 1997 during a Fulbright lectureship in India, where her painting supplies fatefully failed to arrive. She wound up drawing inspiration from the nets of village fishermen, who helped her construct her first fibrous sculptures; now she collaborates with engineers, fabricators, architects and lighting designers on massive works like the one that will grace the center of the Greenway from spring to fall of 2015. Suspended between buildings, it will cast shadows by day, illuminate the park by night and shift with the changing winds—which her sculptures, ethereal though they may appear, are built to withstand. "These are monumental forms that are immensely strong, that can stand up to 110 mph winds. The break strength is beyond 100,000 pounds, yet they're incredibly light and delicate, so soft they can fluidly move with changing wind and weather," Echelman explains. "It's strength through softness, and the ability to adapt and change, rather than brute force."

That strength was tested at Vancouver's windy waterfront, the setting for a project that's broadened options for Boston. "I didn't know if it was possible to create a structure that attached exclusively to existing buildings, yet spans more than 700 feet in an area of high wind. So it creates a lot of openness and possibilities for me to create a work in Boston," says Echelman, who aims to catalyze social spaces through her art. That approach is right at home at the 6-year-old Greenway, host to a public art program that's included everything from a giant hammock to an installation whose colored lights changed in response to viewers' text messages. And as an emphatically urban oasis, the park seems suited to Echelman's ethos. "I remain interested in this idea of looking at the city that we have built and seeing the untapped potential of these physical resources," she says. "All of the buildings have excess lateral load capacity, and we can harness that to create a space for art, for the public to look up at the sky and have a shared experience in the city." / Jacqueline Houton

CHILL OUT

SWEET TREATS ON STATE STREET

COOL CUSTOMERS: Crush Pizza offers 18 flavors of gelato.

IN THE HEAT OF SUMMER, NOTHING CAPS OFF a meal of pizza quite like a scoop or two of ice cream. If the pizza is an authentic Neapolitan, you might want to switch up the ice cream for gelato... especially if it's homemade, as it is at Crush Pizza on State Street. Owner Tony Naser is whipping up 18 flavors of the cool treat, ranging from blackberry lemon basil to avocado to lemon Grisbì (flavored with the Italian cookie of the same name). Quality is top-notch and prices are reasonable, topping out at $5.25 for four scoops, enough for two to share. That cold, sweet creaminess is the perfect balance to a hot, spicy pizza.

TRES COMPANY

El Centro Tres RECENTLY OPENED IN Belmont, completing the Mexican threesome started by El Centro in the South End and continued by El Centro Dos in Brookline. It's the biggest restaurant to date for chef/owner Allan Rodriguez, seating 60-70 in the dining room and 12 at the bar. The bar is a big deal, as El Centro Tres is only the second restaurant in Belmont to be awarded a full liquor license. While you're there, be sure to sample the many sangria flavors.

TRAFFIC TIMEOUT

IF YOU'RE DRIVING DOWN ROUTE 3 WHILE HEADING to the Cape, and the traffic's got you down, here's a suggestion: Take a timeout at Orta in Pembroke, only a few miles off the highway. Unimpressively set in a strip mall, this Italian eatery features some delicious pizzas (including the "drunken mushroom," with arugula, Madeira and truffle essence), beautifully balanced cocktails (try the blue basil gimlet or the aviation) and a sumptuous, flavorful lobster bisque that's a deal at $12. "There's a ton of Scituate lobster in each bowl, so we don't make a profit on it," says chef/owner Brett Williams. You'll arrive at the Cape well fed, the first step to a relaxing getaway.

FIVE GUYS: Co-owner Marco Caputo, co-owner John DeSimone, chef Celio Pereira, general manager Nicholas Garoufalis and co-owner Anthony DePinto are the crew behind Mast'.

FULL MAST'

A NEW DTX EATERY CRAFTS A PLAN FOR A NEIGHBORHOOD CROWD.

THE LONG-STALLED, OFT-DESIRED Downtown Crossing revival is nearly in full swing. First came the residences, with the Kensington and Millennium Place opening their doors, and the Millennium Tower project breaking ground. Now comes the latest in a spate of new restaurants: Mast', an eatery serving up Southern Italian cuisine, is set to open in late July on the ground level of 45 Province's residences.

"We're behind Mayor Walsh with his commitment to the area. We want this to be a neighborhood. People are reluctant to call this a neighborhood, but it's turning into one," says Mast' co-owner John DeSimone. "And what we're focusing on is a neighborhood place. We want to give you an upscale visit, but we don't want it to feel stuffy or unapproachable. We want you to visit three to four times a week. We've priced it accordingly for that."

One of the ways that the team hopes to establish a neighborhood feel is through a bottle-keep service. A trend that's popular overseas, it allows patrons to order their own bottle of wine or liquor and, if it goes unfinished, have it ticketed at no charge and put aside for their return; they can even pass the ticket on to a friend, who can then access the bottle.

"This is huge in Europe, but it's a concept that does not exist anywhere in Boston," says general manager Nicholas Garoufalis.

Despite that unique drink service, the guys behind Mast'—named after an Italian term for masters of their craft—have their focus set squarely on the food. Co-owner Marco Caputo worked as an executive chef in Italy and Spain, and he's brought in Celio Pereira, who spent 17 years at Mamma Maria, to oversee the kitchen. Their aim is to put a fresh spin on simple dishes, and some highlights will include wagyu beef polpette, pappardelle with wild-boar ragu and Neapolitan pizza cooked in a wood-fired oven brought in from Naples, Italy. A selection of street food-inspired fare will allow customers to nosh on treats such as croquettes, pizza al taglio and zeppole. Those snacks will also be on the late-night menu, which will be served till 1:30 am on weekends.

With 70 seats downstairs, the laid-back lounge should handle the late-evening crowd. Copper-colored dropped ceilings and black tiled columns will set the mood in the upstairs dining area, which will fit 50, with another 35 seats on the patio. While a business crowd will likely swarm in for lunch and post-work drinks, the Mast' team really wants to cater to their neighbors.

"Ten years ago, you had the South End expanding and exploding. Five years ago, you had the Seaport. Now, this is the area everyone is putting their eyes on," Garoufalis says. "You can see the transformation of the whole district. We are in the heart of Boston."

Q&A

PEACHY KEEN

Most peaple know Peaches from her 2000 hit "F--- the Poin Awoy." But the 45-yeor-ald electro-pap/performance ortist hosn't slawed down since, starring in o one-waman toke an Jesus Christ Superstar ond callabarating with everyane fram Christino Aguilero ta R.E.M. to Simian Mobile Disca. We caught up with the baundary-pushing musician (who taak her nome fram a Nina Simone song) befare her July 25 performance ot the ICA. /Alexondra Cavollo

WHAT CAN WE EXPECT FROM A PEACHES PERFORMANCE? I do a kind of performative DJ set, because I believe that DJ culture got lost in the way that, when electronic music first came out, it was very "stare at the knobs and turn them." DJing isn't really so complicated, so you can add your own personality to it, and I prefer to always have a live element because, otherwise, why gather a large group of people for live music?

YOUR MUSIC CAN BE... PROVOCATIVE. STARTING OUT, DID YOU INTEND TO PUSH PEOPLE'S BUTTONS? I didn't. I was just saying things that I wanted to say directly, and it just pushed people's buttons. People had very opposing ideas about what I was saying and what I was doing, and all I was saying was what I thought wasn't being said.

YOU'VE LONG BEEN SOMETHING OF AN ACTIVIST. WHAT DO YOU FEEL STRONGLY ABOUT RIGHT NOW? There's still quite an inequality between the sexes, whether you like it or not. Just look at Dov Charney: I think it's great that he's being fired from American Apparel. And the issues with Terry Richardson. But I think it's coming up, and that we should keep on that. But also, we've got to watch out in terms of freedom of expression, and I don't find that [Richardson's art] to be freedom of expression—that's nonconsensual activity. But we have to watch out that we're not too conservative in the way art gets represented.

ANY ADVICE FOR YOUNG GIRLS STARTING OUT IN A CREATIVE FIELD TODAY? I always say this, and it always it sounds really hippie-dippie, but just be true to yourself and say what you really want to say, and not what you think you're supposed to say.

HOW ABOUT ONE LESSON FROM THE TEACHES OF PEACHES YOU'D LIKE ANYONE TO LEARN? Seriously? Before you f--- up, work out your s---.

Purveyors: Supply In Demand

Leave it to MIT alums to create a line of everyday menswear that taps the same tech as NASA spacesuits. Launched locally in 2012, Ministry of Supply finally has a (temporary) brick-and-mortar home, having popped up with a Newbury Street storefront, H1, where it will operate through August. It's an appropriately modern showroom for apparel engineered from fabrics that not only look sharp, but are remarkably functional. There are crisp-cuffed, wrinkle-free dress shirts that wick away moisture, ventilated chinos and tees, and socks made from odor-absorbing, coffee bean-infused textiles. Oh, and no dry cleaning necessary. / Elizabeth Bomze

NO SWEAT: The brand has been an online operation, but H1 lets you see the performance-minded menswear in person.

BEEFED UP: The wagyu burger had us at "bacon jam."

Good Eats: Burger Queen

The Butcher Shop is widely known as a top-shelf steak and wine bar, but this summer, Barbara Lynch's South End spot is dressing down for Burgers and Beer nights, running on Mondays and Tuesdays through mid-August. And as you'd expect, these patties are lavish and reservation-worthy. Our pick is the 7-ounce wagyu chuck burger that's pan-seared until ultra-crisp. It oozes Juicy Lucy-style pockets of Gorgonzola picante and is festooned with chunky bacon jam and garlic aioli. / Elizabeth Bomze

Drink of the Moment
BANANA TIME OUT

PRICE: $11

INVENTOR: Bar manager Sam Gabrielli

INGREDIENTS: Privateer Amber rum, Giffard Banane du Brésil, lime juice

FLAVOR: "A little woody, a little nutty."

PAIR IT WITH: "Anything that's coming off our raw bar." Gabrielli suggests Island Creek oysters. "They tend to be a little sweeter, not too briny, not too salty." Drop by Russell House any night after 11 for $1 bivalves.

INSPIRATION: Last summer's Daiquiri Time Out (DTO) craze. The rum drink is one of his three favorites. "They're simple. You can expand on them forever. And there is just nothing like a dry daiquiri."

GONE FISHING: Gabrielli's daiquiri affinity is more than skin-deep. He has a permanent declaration of his devotion on his rib cage thanks to a boozy, unsuccessful fishing trip with DTO founder Andrew Deitz. "We were striper fishing off of Quincy, and we didn't catch or see a goddamn thing. And I was happy just to have a day off, so I was getting pretty drunk while everyone else was taking the fishing too seriously." Gabrielli asked Deitz if he'd pay for a tattoo of the DTO logo, and he took the bait. "Within 10 minutes we had an appointment... And now sometimes, when I take my shirt off, I get free daiquiris."

HOT TOPIC: Those looking for an alternative that's smoky and spicy should check out one of summer's most-ordered drinks, the Keyser Soze. The El Diablo variation features a housemade ginger beer (with ginger, lime juice, sugar, salt and pepper and a touch of cinnamon) and mezcal. Sriracha brings the heat—and a nice color—to the cocktail. / Sarah Hagman

DTO, YEAH: Make time to take a break with this daiquiri-inspired cocktail.

MOTHER LODE

A MEMOIR EXPLORES THE FAMILIAL TIES THAT BIND AND BRUISE US.

With or Without You* by Domenica Ruta
Published by Spiegel & Grau, 240 pages, $16
The author grew up in Danvers.

DOMENICA "NIKKI" RUTA'S MEMOIR recounts her youth in Danvers as the daughter of single mother Kathi—a woman so wildly extreme and cruel that if you traced Kathi's every outrageous utterance and act with a yellow highlighter, your book could easily become jaundiced.

Kathi is a mass of weird contradictions, grunge and grit. She's a reckless user and occasional dealer of drugs, which she shares with her daughter. But she also takes classes at Harvard Extension School, and when she marries Michael, a taxi company owner, Kathi transforms the business into a coach and livery service, transporting special-needs children. (One shivers thinking of that vulnerable population, knowing how she treats her own daughter.) The former welfare recipient's company impressively, but briefly, grosses a million a year. And Kathi encourages Nikki to enter the prestigious Phillips Academy in Andover—though she also encourages her to get pregnant at age 18.

Despite the great differences in sensibility between Kathi and her bookish daughter, Nikki also develops a serious addiction, in her case to alcohol. But unlike her mother, Nikki slowly moves out of the darkness of her daily drinking and into the light of sobriety. And by vividly portraying, and eventually peeling off, this maternal nettle, Nikki finds a path to a modicum of peace and a lively literary voice.

FROM PAGE 4: I remember watching her body pass by through the windshield, then jumping into her arms as she opened the door, lifted me up, and sat me on top of the car's hood. It was a cool gray day and the metal felt warm beneath my legs. Mum leaned into the open driver's-side window and pulled out our fireplace poker from the backseat. Then, without a word, she began smashing the windshield of someone else's car. ◆

ASK CHERYL

Q: I EXERCISE (WELL, KIND OF) BUT I STILL HAVE A TUMMY PAUNCH AND FAT ON THE INSIDE OF MY THIGHS. NOTHING SEEMS TO WORK; THOUGHTS?

A: Yes, we can help with CoolSculpting, which is a quick and safe non-surgical body contouring treatment. The procedure freezes unwanted fat, which is then naturally eliminated from your body. That fat is permanently gone. No needles, no surgery, and no downtime. It is safe and effective.

Many of us have fatty areas, such as our love handles or saddlebags, that resist diet and exercise. CoolSculpting uses controlled cooling to target and crystallize fat cells; only fat cells are affected. After treatment, the crystallized fat cells are gradually removed by the immune system, resulting in a permanent reduction.

Results are visible within 3 weeks of treatment and the final results are seen after 2- 3 months. This is a great treatment for your boyfriend or husband also!

BOYHOOD ★★★½
Starring Ellar Coltrane, Patricia Arquette, Lorelei Linklater, Marco Perella, Jamie Howard, Andrew Villarreal, Jenni Tooley, Richard Jones, Karen Jones, Brad Hawkins, Zoe Graham and Ethan Hawke. Written and directed by Richard Linklater. At Boston Common and Kendall Square.

BEFORE MANHOOD

RICHARD LINKLATER FINDS THE POETRY IN GROWING UP.

WITH HIS LANDMARK TRILOGY—1995's Before Sunrise, 2004's Before Sunset and last year's Before Midnight—independent filmmaking maverick Richard Linklater has spent 18 years tracking the lives of lovers Celine (Julie Delpy) and Jesse (Ethan Hawke) in an extended-storytelling experiment, checking in with the couple at nine-year intervals. But as risk-taking and successful as the Before films are, it's his new picture, Boyhood, that expands and elevates the idea of following characters over a set period of time. Linklater's epic look at growing-up's mundane moments was shot in only 39 days—over the course of 12 years.

The Texan writer/director took a big gamble in 2002 when he rolled the dice on 6-year-old Ellar Coltrane, whose acting experience was limited to a couple of commercials. We first see his character, Mason Evans Jr., as a cute little moppet daydreaming in a grassy field beside his elementary school, squinting as he stares into the blue sky above. When Mason's mom, Olivia (Patricia Arquette), arrives to pick him up, it's a bit off-putting to see him look briefly into the camera, breaking the spell of naturalism that Linklater excels at creating. But things improve quickly.

Mason goes about everyday kid stuff—riding his bike, spraying graffiti, capturing early, erotic glimpses of breasts in lingerie catalogs. We're introduced to his slightly older sister, Samantha (Lorelei Linklater, the director's daughter), as Olivia reads her two children a bedtime story. But Linklater's not interested only in an idyllic Norman Rockwell portrait of childhood. There's pain, and much of it stems from alcohol abuse.

Olivia is tucking in Mason and Sam after their story when an unexpected visitor shows up in their home. Brandishing a beer, Ted (Steven Prince) is there to verbally abuse her for staying home with her children rather than partying with him that evening. During breakfast the next morning, Olivia informs Mason and Sam that they'll be moving to another town. Thus begins another pattern in the film: flight from abusive relationships.

Moving into a new home in Houston, the brother and sister settle into new routines, with new friends and separate rooms. It's all rather ordinary, almost stilted. But then Linklater produces an ace from his deck, introducing Mason Sr., played by Hawke. Stopping to visit his kids in his prized GTO, he takes them bowling, before telling them about the "big lie" of Iraq. "Who are you gonna vote for next fall?" he asks them. The three already know the response, which they recite together: "Anybody but Bush!"

As we move through the years, it's astonishing to see our protagonist... becoming not only a better actor, but a more fully formed person.

This is one of many funny little signifiers that act as time capsules, buried throughout the film to clue us in on the year of the action. Some of these signposts are quite literal: By the end of W's second term, Mason Sr. has the kids planting Obama signs on neighborhood lawns—and uprooting McCain posters. He has been away in Alaska. "I needed to take some time," he tells them, adding, "Your mother's a piece of work." She's also fiercely protective, sending her ex-husband packing when she finds him at the house upon her return home.

The narrative Linklater constructs is purely elliptical, and as we move through the years, it's astonishing to see our protagonist, Mason Jr., becoming not only a better actor, but a more fully formed person. We witness his first pimples, his doughy early teens and his growth into a true individual; after many an abusive father figure has rolled through his life (his biological dad turns out to be the nicest and most grounded of the bunch), he develops an interest in photography, prompting one of his high-school teachers (Tom McTigue) to tell him that he won't amount to anything. Mason knows better.

During this artsy phase, Mason meets a gorgeous girl, Sheena (Zoe Graham), who notes his earrings and his painted nails and comments, "You're kind of weird, you know that?" Naturally, they begin dating. Heartbreak will probably follow, but while Linklater certainly shows us the hardships of life (more drunk husbands/stepfathers), he balances them with joys large and small.

His ever-changing facial hair charting the passing years, the elder Mason eventually remarries and begins a new family while growing closer with his first son. And while Olivia never finds her equal, she does discover the strength to survive on her own, putting herself through school and becoming a well-regarded professor—all while raising a couple of great kids. This is the finest work Arquette's put on screen.

At Mason's graduation party, during one of the rare moments alone with her first husband when she's not sniping at him, Olivia observes, "Can you believe they're both out of high school?"

"You did a great job with them," Mason's father admits. "Thanks," she says. "I never thought I'd hear you say that."

And neither did we. It's just one of life's little moments that makes this 2 hour, 46 minute film move so effortlessly fast. ◆

BOOTS ON

NORAH JONES AND HER GAL PALS RIDE THEIR GIDDY ROOTS TRIO INTO THE SPOTLIGHT.

GETTING THE THREE WOMEN OF Puss n Boots on the phone at the same time creates the kind of chatty camaraderie that graced the stages of little New York clubs long before the rootsy trio made an album and drew a wider buzz as Norah Jones' new band.

"That's part of the reason why the last eight years of playing in this band have been so fun," says Jones, who set aside her piano—and established solo career—to play electric guitar and fiddle within the countrified kinship of Puss n Boots.

"I never get to work in an all-girl band," injects fellow singer/songwriter Sasha Dobson. "I've spent my entire life singing with jazz musicians, predominately men. In this band, we egg each other on, support each other and push each other to try new things."

That's a boon for Catherine Popper, best known for her high-profile stints as bassist for rockers Ryan Adams, Grace Potter and Jack White (including on his new album Lazaretto). "We were buds," Popper says of her new gang. "I don't really have my own project, so it's been such a learning experience for me to step up and be a singer."

Jones, who swept the 2003 Grammy Awards with her solo debut Come Away With Me, embraced her own learning curve. "This has been a great place to work on my guitar playing," she says. "We just played in dive bars till we kinda got our sound together. I don't even know that we ever thought we'd make an album."

That's changed with the release of No Fools, No Fun on July 15 and a short initial tour that brings Puss n Boots to three area gigs: the Green River Festival on July 12, the Sinclair on July 24 and the Newport Folk Festival on July 26.

"We just played in dive bars till we kinda got our sound together."

"We're doing bigger shows than we've ever done with this band," Jones says the day after the group played the Clearwater Festival by the Hudson River—a show broadcast on the radio. "We were told we weren't allowed to curse, and this band is usually pretty late-night," she says. "You never know what these sweet girls are going to say onstage, so I think that threw us off more than anything!"

Because Puss n Boots found its footing in front of audiences, No Fools, No Fun mixes studio originals with live and studio covers, ranging from Rodney Crowell's "Bull Rider" and Roger Miller's "Tarnished Angel" to Wilco's "Jesus, Etc." Jones even emulates Neil Young with her own dry lead-guitar snarl on "Down by the River" while guitarist Dobson holds down the drum kit. The group recorded the live tracks at its favorite Brooklyn haunt, the Bell House.

"It would be a little weird to have only a studio album for this band," Jones says. "Our energy live is more on the fun, silly side, and when we recorded a few of the covers [in the studio], they didn't have the same energy that they do live."

In addition to switching instruments, the three musicians swap lead and harmony vocals. "Anything with luscious three-part harmonies obviously is an inspiration," says Popper, who plays acoustic guitar as well as bass. "That's part of what got us by in the beginning," Jones adds with a laugh, "when I was f---ing up the guitar all the time. Well, we sang real pretty before we could play all the chords right!"

Indeed, despite the self-deprecating banter, the trio weaves some sublime harmonies. And the originals—two each for Dobson and Popper and one from Jones—balance nicely. Dobson's vocals charm with smoky resonance, much like Jones' early work, while Jones sparks breezy honky-tonk in "Don't Know What It Means" and Popper inspires intriguing harmonies in her spectrally picked "Pines."

"We have a certain luxury of knowing each other's sound," Dobson says. "There's a comfort level that's so powerful. I often forget [that] until we start playing."

Eventually though, Puss n Boots will return to part-time jam sessions. "We're not going to stop the other things we do," Jones says, "but it's definitely fun to make this the focus for a while." ◆

YOU ASKED FOR IT

SOUND ADVICE BY THE SPOONFUL

IN MY WRITING LIFE, I STARTED OUT AS NOVELIST and, through a series of twists and turns, veered into writing nonfiction, including several books offering practical advice on life and money. I entered the advice business accidentally, having been in the investment profession for many years. Today, for instance, I've gotten eight calls so far, and not one person was talking to me about markets or money, except peripherally. All were asking for advice in one way or another, calling to find someone who could help with buying a condo, about assistance in publishing a book in Hungary, about whether I'd give a speech to an office's interns and about whether the caller was being too pushy with other people in sales. What I call "freebies" could take up the entire day. But these friends and clients are looking for answers, as we all are—including the next five questioners, whose concerns form this inaugural advice column. Feel free to chime in with anything that's on your mind.

If you receive a semi-large sum of money (i.e., winning the lottery or receiving an inheritance), is it better to pay off debt, like student loans or credit cards, or should you invest the money in a different way? Save? Plan a vacation? Buy something extravagant you would not be able to afford otherwise? First of all, know that money always draws a crowd. It's amazing how a person's good fortune, particularly in the case of lotteries, is almost instantly known to friends, enemies and strangers, too. Friends will be jealous. Indeed, friends and family often have a stake in keeping you down. Everybody seems to want a piece of your good fortune. So be aware, and then be practical. If you win $10,000 or more, use one-third to pay down a credit-card debt, mortgage or student loan. Save or invest one-third, preferably in a long-term blue chip growth fund or exchange-traded fund. And then spend one-third on a little travel to expand your knowledge of the world. Pay for this in full.

My husband and I are having a baby, and everyone keeps asking us what we are going to name him. Family members are especially pushy. We've tried politely to tell them that we don't yet know the name (which is true), but they won't stop. How can we get them off our backs without being rude? Two of my three children are named after family. Our third we named after the hero of a novel called The Magus. We thought it was a good idea at the time. Today, of course, baby names often seem to be pulled out of thin air, or taken from minerals or vegetables. But whatever you choose, it's your own business. I would politely tell family and friends that, in the naming of your children, you do not need any help from anyone else. My only suggestion is that your baby's name not rhyme with anything dirty. It will save them trouble in high school.

Which goes best with a tuxedo: a cummerbund or a vest? What about suspenders? Any other guidance on wearing a tux well? First of all, the proper terminology for a tuxedo, if you want to be fancy, is "dinner jacket." I happen to love fancy vests with formal wear. My favorite vest is velvet with embroidered owls on it. You can go wild with vests, and it might be nice if you could have an old-fashioned silver or gold chain for your pockets. The chains traditionally had a pocket watch on one end and an antique ornament on the other. And my tummy now holds up my formal pants without suspenders, but I would recommend wearing them.

During the interview process, when and how do you address compensation? And if you feel you're underpaid in your current position or that the new position entails a substantial increase in responsibility, how do you handle a request to disclose your current salary? Basically, I'm wondering what's the best approach for advocating for myself without turning off the prospective employer. Never sell yourself short, and don't discuss your previous salary. Before discussing money, I would always say, "There may be a few things about me that you don't know." This is the part of the interview where you share a couple of ways that you can add value to the organization that do not appear on your resume—some special skill or even a hobby that will get their attention and demonstrate why you're different from everyone else. If you present yourself in a confident manner, I would say, "Because of the value that I think I can add to the organization, here's what I feel my roles are worth." Then you name a figure slightly above what you think is possible.

At what age/socioeconomic status is it reasonable to start splitting the check evenly when dining with a group? I'm in my late 20s and frequently dine out, and when the check arrives there's always one person who wants to pay only for what they ordered simply because their entree was a few dollars cheaper or they had one fewer drink. How do you broach this subject so you can finally go out to a meal without presenting the waiter with nine credit cards? Set the rules before dinner. When I do go out alone with a couple, I tell them, "We're going to treat your wife/husband/date as my date, too, and you and I will split the bill evenly between the two of us." This, I suppose, could be too generous on my part, but also smart and simple. With big groups especially, never niggle over small stuff. If you order a bratwurst and I order steak, just split it all evenly. You'll keep more friends this way. ◆

HAIL YEAH!

MY DEBUT AS AN UBER DRIVER

EVERYONE HAS TALES OF BOSTON TAXI WOE. Before cabs took credit cards, there was the ol' "I don't have any change" ploy when you had a $20 bill and a $10 fare. There was the cabbie who took me from Logan to Brookline via Southie, which, last time I checked, wasn't on the way. There was the cab that got into an accident cutting off somebody on Comm Ave. From that point on, I always insisted on wearing a seat belt in cabs, even if it meant extracting the buckle from deep within the Petri-dish crevasse of the overstuffed prisoner seat.

There are only 1,825 cabs in all of Boston, a city where more than 30,000 people regularly congregate in a single building. At any given time, 98 percent of that humble fleet is parked just around the corner from the airport, awaiting orders from the surly walkie-talkie maestro who ushers five or six cars at a time into the stubby loading corral. Ye unfortunate travelers, stay behind the gate until you are summoned! The Logan cab dispatcher is the all-powerful bouncer at the hottest club in the city, White Camry. You, you, you—no, not you.

Enter Uber. A few weeks ago, I cleared my background check and signed on as an Uber driver. This was in Charlotte, the same weekend as my moonshine-fueled NASCAR experience. Which, I assure you, came after I was done Ubering.

Becoming an Uber driver is a little more involved than it probably seems from the back seat of the car. Besides the criminal check and the obvious license, registration and insurance requirements, you've also got to visit an Uber office and pass an exam. The test—a video followed by multiple-choice questions—takes about 25 minutes and could be summarized as "How not to annoy people." I failed.

Yes, I failed my first crack at the Uber certification test. I got so salty about this that I made the manager, David, restart the video so I could show him where I was actually right and the answer was wrong. At this point, he seemed to be reconsidering my suitability for Uber duty, not just because I failed the test but because I was getting belligerent about it. Maybe a busted-ass yellow Crown Vic would be more my speed?

In my defense, early in the video, the narrator warns against logging into the system before you're sitting in your car, since tardy drivers are a top complaint. At the end, there's a question about the top complaint, yet the correct answer is not "tardy drivers." I think it's "smelly drivers." So I got that one wrong. But the gist is not to be late or smelly.

Also, don't ask passengers to rate you five stars. Asking people to rate you five stars is apparently a great reason for people to rate you less than five stars. Don't honk the horn when you get to someone's place. Don't accept a tip—unless the rider insists, in which case you politely accept the money. The slickest app in the world can't erase the delicate inefficiencies of our ingrained tribal customs.

Uber issues drivers a dedicated iPhone 4 and a windshield mount. When they activated the phone at the office, I noticed that they left the microphone on. So throughout the night I made sure to occasionally say things like "The best part about driving is the freedom of being nude!" Although if the phone's camera was also activated, I guess they could see that I was joking about that most of the time.

I made three trips as a driver and received five stars across the board. Of course, I was juicing the returns by driving a Bentley, so I probably could've looked, acted and smelled like Gary Busey and still notched rave reviews. I'd rate all my riders five stars, too (Uber accountability runs in both directions), in that none of them verbally abused me or yakked in the car. Then again, it was early evening and I was helping Charlotteans begin their night rather than end it. Post-midnight is surely a different scene.

Despite my personal catalogue of horrible taxi experiences, working as a driver made me a little nostalgic for the grim seediness of cabs, which was diminishing even before Uber and its ilk arrived with some genuine competition. The ingredient that's missing from the Uber model is the tolerance for feisty characters. "I was uneventfully transported to my destination by a professionally dressed individual in a late-model Honda Accord" isn't much of a story. The cabbie who got me from the Hough's Neck Dunkin' Donuts to Logan in 18 minutes, "check engine" light ablaze, all while sorting out some life drama on the phone? That was excitement. Five stars. ◆

Becoming an Uber driver is a little more involved than it probably seems from the back of the car.

Think that's funny? Send unbiased emails to ezra@improper.com.

SOROFF ON DAVID ORTIZ

The Red Sox' beloved No. 34 sounds off on Fenway secrets (and snacks).

BY Jonathan Soroff

DAVID ORTIZ, AKA BIG PAPI, was born and raised in Santo Domingo in the Dominican Republic. He graduated from Estudia Espallat High School and in 1992 was signed by the Seattle Mariners, playing in the minor leagues until 1996, when he was traded to the Minnesota Twins. He made his major league debut in 1997. In 2003, he signed a free agent contract with the Red Sox, and he has gone on to become a three-time World Series champion, the holder of the Red Sox single-season home run record (54) and a fixture in the All-Star Game (not to mention an MVP in our book—see page 111). A documentary about his career, David Ortiz In the Moment, premieres on Epix on July 17. His foundation, the David Ortiz Children's Fund, raises money to help provide medical care to children in need. He and his wife, Tiffany, live in Weston with their kids.

Jonathan Soroff: After the Marathon bombing, did you mean to drop the F-bomb when you said, "It's our f---ing city"?
David Ortiz: I did, I guess. I said it.

Any repercussions from it? No. I think people liked it. There are T-shirts that say it now. It was appropriate at the time.

Place in the Dominican Republic that every Bostonian should visit? I would say Punta Cana. It's beautiful.

Record that you don't have but you want? I'd like to finish my career with 500 home runs.

In one word, what makes you such a great baseball player? Consistency. I try to be consistent.

Sport you most like to watch? Besides baseball, it's gotta be a toss-up between football and basketball.

Which one can you play? Basketball.

Favorite casino game? I don't like gambling anymore, but if I had to pick one, it'd be blackjack.

You're 38. How long do you think you'll play? I don't know. We'll see. It depends on how I feel.

Thing that hurts the most after a game? The whole body. [Laughs.] Everything.

Favorite Fenway snack? Guacamole and chips.

Most unusual thing you ever did with a baseball bat? Broke it over my knee.

Remind me not to piss you off. So you got 560 write-in votes for mayor of Boston. What's the first thing you'd do if you were elected? I'd increase security in schools.

Fantasy endorsement? I'd like to do a commercial for Samsung. That would be cool.

Biggest pig in the locker room? Pedroia. [Laughs.]

Player you admire the most? Oh, I can't tell you that. Everyone else would be insulted.

Would you ever let your kids play pro baseball? If they wanted to, yeah.

Tell me a secret about Fenway that most people don't know. Well, I'd say the sleeping room we have—a room to take naps.

Do you ever wear all your World Series rings at the same time? [Laughs.] No. I keep them in a safe.

Do you dream about baseball? Yeah. Well, I used to a lot more than I do now.

Your idea of a perfect day off? Sit at my house, get disconnected. Just hanging out with the family. I like to cook out at my house a lot. I eat more at my house than I eat in a restaurant.

Best restaurant for Dominican food in Boston? It's gotta be Vejigantes in the South End.

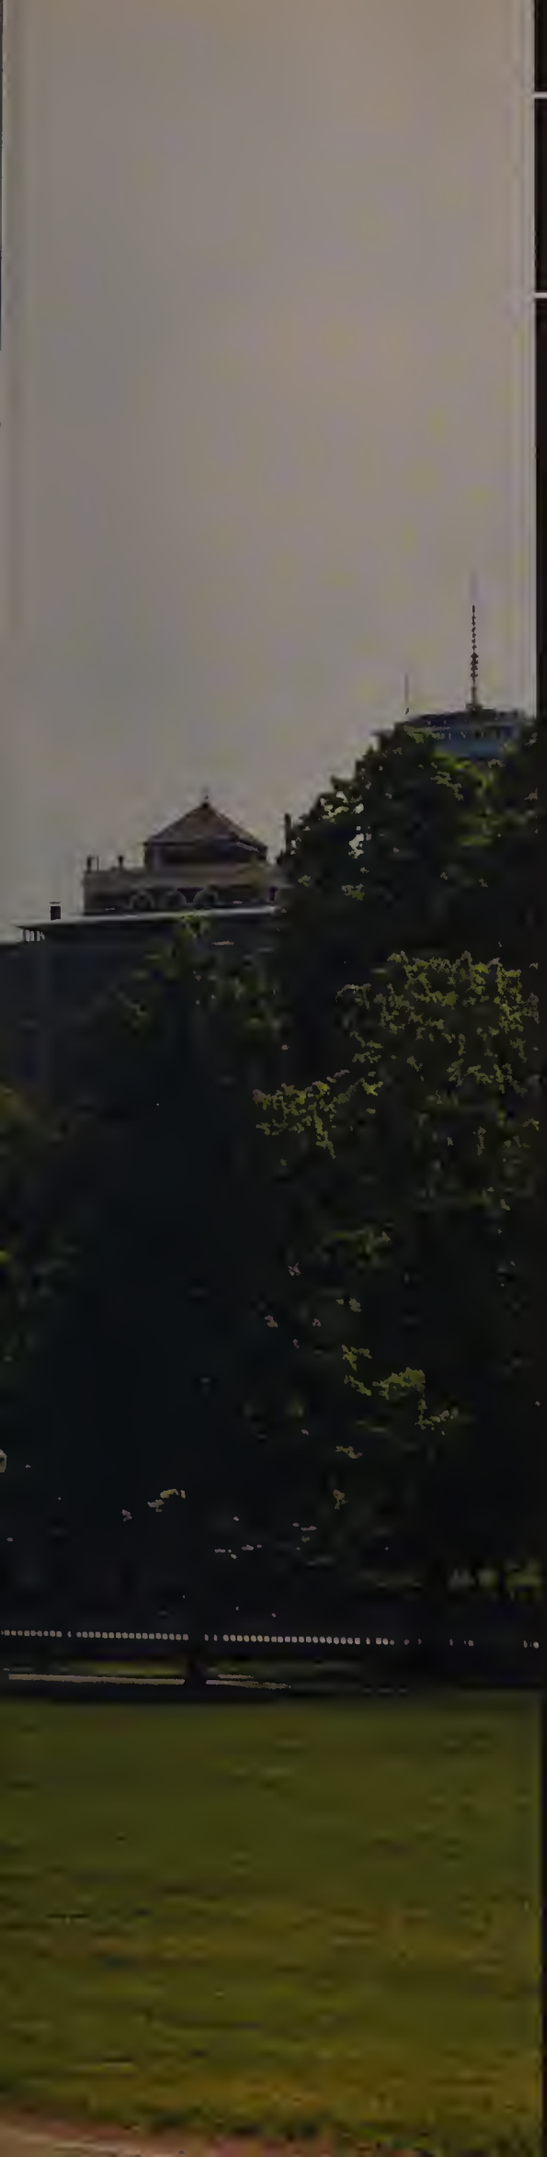
Do they have good patacones? They've got everything, and if they don't have it on the menu, they'll still make it for you.

I have a feeling they'd do that for you, not for me. Thing that people would be surprised to learn about you: Do you keep bees, play chess...? I like to bowl. I'm pretty good.

Who does the fade in your eyebrow? My barber here, El Vacano.

Favorite baseball reporter? I'd say Rob Bradford on WEEI.

If "designated hitter" had a sexual connotation, what would it be? [Laughs.] I think I'm going to leave that one alone.



What's your guilty pleasure? I can watch TV all day. The Dominican Channel, action movies. I have this one Colombian movie called Tres Caines, and my wife is always like, "You're watching that again? C'mon!" She can't understand it. I sneak down like a cat and turn it on, but she always catches me.

One adjective to describe Boston? United. It's a very unique city.

"I'D LIKE TO DO A COMMERCIAL FOR SAMSUNG. THAT WOULD BE COOL."

Despite its frequent echoes through Fenway Park, we're not exactly sure when anyone was last "Shipping Up To Boston," but we're pretty sure they'd be pleasantly surprised. The number of new, reinvented, reimagined and just plain wonderful things is hard to keep up with, and for anyone who hasn't been keeping track, rest assured: We have.

If (or when) the Dropkick Murphys write Wicked Pissah—The Musical, they would undoubtedly mention some of the entries in this issue. Our Boston's Best is a compendium of the finest the Hub has to offer, from shopping, dining and nightlife to the people who make this "our f—ing city," to quote cover guy David Ortiz.

As to how we determine these superlatives, the process involves convening savvy locals, plying them with superb food and wine, and soliciting their opinions. This year, our gracious host was new Theater District hot spot Ostra, where arts impresarios, media mavens and business gurus gathered in the private dining room to weigh in on their favorite things about Boston. Votes were tallied and contenders vetted by our crack editorial team. Then, by an occult algorithm involving late nights, heated debates and many Solomonic choices, we arrived at our winners.

We'd like to thank our judges, Ostra, Big Papi and you, our readers, for making this, our 23rd annual Boston's Best issue, the best ever. Enjoy, and if you're just shipping up, we sincerely hope you find your footing.

ASIAN FUSION
SHOJO

This is how it starts: You bring a cocktail—let's make it mezcal—to your lips, and suddenly, you're enveloped by a nectarous fog of elderflower foam. You'll long to hover indefinitely, but your attention soon turns to some duck-fat fries. Douse them in sriracha aioli, and poof—they'll be gone. A samurai film plays above the bar; watch intently, wise one. You'll need to channel your inner warrior to save room for multiple orders of bao, brimming with suckling pig and kimchi.

9 Tyler St., Boston (617-423-7888) shojoboston.com

TATTE

This Brookline favorite recently welcomed three Cambridge siblings, but there are no growing pains here. Bouquets of chocolate roses bloom behind the counter, plum and pecan tarts bedeck charming antique shelves, and a sweet, buttery scent suffuses the air. This is the actualization of every dream you've had of Paris, where the pastries are as good as they are gorgeous, and there's nothing that a slice of cherry clafoutis can't solve. It's really no coincidence that Tatte's croissants are shaped like smiles.

BÁNH MÌ
BLUE DRAGON

Prime time for scoring the best bánh mì in town is from 2 to 5 pm at Blue Dragon. That's when the afternoon menu focuses on Vietnamese sandwiches and the crowds at this hot spot thin out. A stroke of luck, because you'll want to be sitting down as you devour one of Ming Tsai's leviathans. Crusty Iggy's bread encases pickled, julienned veg, a generous schmear of pâté and plentiful proteins, like roast pork and peppery shrimp. Our current favorite is the slow-roasted lamb with mango and cucumber yogurt.

BARBECUE
SWEET CHEEKS

Skeptics wondered why Tiffani Faison, first famed as an early Top Chef contestant, would choose to feature notoriously difficult American slow-smoke barbecue at her debut restaurant, but we're very glad she did. Sweet Cheeks turns out terrific versions of the Texas-style 'cue, especially brisket and sausages, and great sides, including heavenly biscuits, really fine BBQ beans and (oddly enough) broccoli casserole, in a noisy, appropriately casual setting in the Fenway. The fine beer list surely doesn't hurt.

1381 Boylston St., Boston (617-266-1300) sweetcheeksq.com

BREAD
Fornax

Family-owned and -operated by Kim and Chris Fallon, Fornax bakes heavenly breads (fitting, since it's named for the Roman goddess of ovens). Although they're best known for their perfect boules, they also offer more than a dozen other artisanal loaves. Favorites include Irish soda bread, packed with plump dark and golden raisins, and their rosemary batard—think of it as a baguette's stunted, wider cousin—with freshly chopped herbs and a crackly cornmeal crust.

BARTENDER
KATIE EMMERSON AT THE HAWTHORNE

"Sitting at Katie's bar is one of life's great joys," says fellow bartender Tyler Wang of Audubon Boston, and we heartily concur. The willowy beauty who serves as bar manager of the Hawthorne not only stewards one of the best-regarded craft cocktail teams in the city, in one of its coolest spaces—an unmarked pair of rooms tucked under the Hotel Commonwealth's lobby—but is herself a witty beacon of hospitality with dazzling technical chops behind the bar.

BEST-KEPT SECRET
UNION SQUARE DONUTS DELIVERS ON THURSDAYS AND FRIDAYS

This is how legends are born. Step 1: Email Union Square Donuts by 1 pm to place your order for next-day delivery. Step 2: On Thursday or Friday, donuts are dispatched to your office. Step 3: With extreme urgency, announce to your co-workers that you must discuss this week's deliverable. Open the box and boom: You have become the Office Hero, the one who brought maple-bacon and sea-salted bourbon caramel to the people.

BISCUITS

TREATS ON WASHINGTON

Friends since their days at the Culinary Institute of America, owners Dana Briley and Jessica Brown turn out a panoply of willpower-crushing delights—sticky buns topped with toasted pecans, craquelins glistening with an orange-blossom glaze—but perhaps none so tempting as their fluffy biscuits. With soft, doughy interiors and lightly browned edges, they come in pleasing permutations like sweet cinnamon-and-sugar, cheesy cheddar-jalapeno, and icing-capped lemon-poppy seed. (Don't make this hard: Just buy one of each.)

BREAKFAST

TRIDENT BOOKSELLERS & CAFE

Here, breakfast is an all-day, every-day affair, and we certainly wish we could start (or end) each day with a freshly-squeezed juice blend alongside an apple-brie omelet, potato chuckwagon or Trident's crowning glory: the zesty, lemon-ricotta stuffed French toast, drizzled with blueberry sauce. Its griddle-kissed challah is as thick as the novel you can pluck from the shelves while you wait—leisurely reading counterside with a Viennese espresso, or at a cozy table gazing out the windows overlooking Newbury Street.

BRUNCH

MISTRAL

Brunch is the most important portmanteau of the day, and Mistral has all the classics, perfected to a platonic ideal. Take your standard yogurt and granola, elevated with panna cotta, almonds and mango glacé. An egg-white frittata bubbles beneath tiny globes of oven-cured tomatoes, each one bursting once it hits your tongue. And Valrhona hot chocolate may be the only thing better than a bloody on Sunday, with its voluminous cloud of housemade marshmallow floating in your cup.

223 Columbus Ave., Boston (617-867-9300) mistralbistro.com

CRAIGIE ON MAIN

In an utterly done-to-death category, the bar at Tony Maws' celebrated nose-to-tail bistro still serves the ne plus ultra of local burgers. Its magic is based on an exquisite, umami-packed beef blend (including marrow, suet and dehydrated miso powder) and an unusual preparation (steamed in a CVap oven, charred on a plancha). Line up early before the daily ration runs out, and go in late summer, the only time of year when local tomatoes are good enough to be included.

DELI

Moody's Delicatessen & Provisions

A few bright spots have recently emerged out of the murk that was Boston's delicatessen scene, none more exciting than this newcomer that cures, smokes and handcrafts its own dazzling charcuterie, salumi, sausages and more. Beyond its awe-inspiring retail wares, Moody's offers a counter-service menu of spectacular sandwiches, including corned beef, roast beef, pastrami and a gut-busting pork-belly bánh mì. It's a little bit of heaven—the closest Boston gets to legendary urban delis like Katz's and Schwartz's.

BURRITO

ANNA'S TAQUERIA

Oh, Anna's—it's almost unfair. Once again, their Mission-style missiles reign supreme. Rigorous cross-sectional analysis confirms their composition's supremacy: a blissful equilibrium of rice, beans and brawn, like saucy carnitas or spicy slow-cooked chicken. Bounding all that goodness is a steamed, stretchy tortilla, rolled into a taut torpedo and snugly sheathed in foil. This savvy structure ensures that fillings stay put, so every morsel lands right in the tank instead of your shirt.

BUTCHER SHOP
M.F. DULOCK PASTURE-RAISED MEATS

An antidote to the industrial food system that divorces consumers from the farms whose wares fill our larders, Dulock is a compact artisanal wonder. Its pasture-raised animals are sourced from nearby farms, its tools and workspaces for aging and butchering laid out in plain view. The fruits of its craft and care fill its display case with immaculate and flavorful cuts, grinds and sausages of beef, pork, lamb, goat and chicken. It's the more delicious, respectful, sustainable meat market.

CHEESE
FORMAGGIO KITCHEN

Other than its South End iteration, no place in Boston can approach this veteran Huron Village cheesemonger for the globe-trotting breadth of its small-producer selection and the level of staff knowledge and commitment to educating customers on the joys of cheese. It's also a stunning gourmet grocer with fantastic imported charcuterie, salumi, breads, spices, wine and beer. It's tough to wander out of this place without a small bag of costly, delicious treasures.

CHINESE
PEACH FARM

This subterranean spot specializes in the bounty beneath the waves. Clams bathed in bean sauce are a rich, palate-expanding opener. If you ask for fish, you'll first be invited to meet it, proffered tableside in a bucket for your approval. And if there's one dish that single-handedly illustrates the prowess of this peach, it's the Cantonese-style lobster with scallions. Lavishly glazed in a sumptuous, vibrant heap, it's the kind of treasure you could only hope to find under the sea.

FOOD TRUCK
Fugu Truck

Food trucks quickly became ubiquitous in Boston, and now treat streams of hungry urban workers to delicious quick-serve lunches—without the crummy-fast-food guilt. It's one legacy of which former Mayor Tom Menino deserves to be proud. Among a lot of worthy competition, the bright-aquamarine Fugu Truck, adorned with a cartoon version of its delicious, poisonous namesake, thrills the lunchtime crowd with fresh, nice-priced renditions of Asian street food, notably ramen, bibimbap and pork-belly buns that would impress David Chang.

CLAM CHOWDER
B&G OYSTERS

A Barbara Lynch establishment doesn't cut any corners, and that's especially true in the case of B&G's intricately crafted New England clam chowder, in which onions, celery, and leeks have sweetly steeped. White wine has been reduced, Yukon Golds have yielded to cream and milk, and savory bacon lardons bob alongside tender Topneck clams. The resulting robust potage is balanced with puff pastry croutons—cayenne-covered, they provide perfect quick hits of heat and crunch. You might add a final dash of salt with tears of joy.

COFFEE SHOP THINKING CUP

Coffee lovers who have graduated from pedestrian Dunks and Starbucks can choose from a growing range of small, independently owned Boston cafes, none better than this mini chain with three in-town locations. One of a handful of local outlets for coffees from legendary Oregon sourcer and roaster Stumptown, Thinking Cup offers superb renditions of drip, espresso and pour-over coffees, does proper teas and an amazing hot chocolate and offers a creditable selection of pastries and sandwiches.

COMEBACK
DELUX CAFE

Civilians and restaurant industry workers alike were dismayed by the January closing of this tiny, long-lived South End institution, a rare almost-dive in a largely gentrified neighborhood. But in May, hallelujahs resounded at the news that two former servers had bought and reopened Delux, having refurbished its barstools and updated its closet-sized kitchen. To the relief of all, its very nice (and nicely priced) drinks, decent food and quirky decor—yes, including the beloved Elvis shrine—remain intact.

100 Chandler St., Boston (617-338-5258)

DESSERT
CLIO

Ken Oringer founded his restaurant empire and garnered early fame with Clio's meticulously plated, occasionally avant-garde French-influenced fare. Dinner here is a tough act to follow, yet pastry chef Monica Glass nonetheless draws gasps from patrons with her gorgeous, almost abstract desserts. For instance, it's impossible not to be awed by her chocolate-themed Les Bois, which features a complex forest of organic shapes and textures edging a large, mostly empty plate—and that's before you taste it.

DIM SUM
WINSOR DIM SUM CAFE

When you think "dim sum," you may imagine a vast yet crowded room where a flurry of hands fly as food carts wheel by. At Winsor, you won't witness such theatrics; the space is small, and a checklist menu replaces rolling trays. But you will find excellent, high-value eats, like paper-thin, translucent dumplings chock-full of pork and peanuts, pillowy orbs of custard buns, patties of pan-fried turnip cake to dip in occult XO sauce, and comforting bowls of warm congee. This is what food-as-theater should be.

ICE CREAM
FoMu

Alternative, small-batch ice creams are booming, and we can't get enough of FoMu—as in "faux-moo," a deliciously and deceptively dairy-free treat. Creators Deena Jalal and Hin Tang use coconut as a base, sweetening it with organic agave and unrefined cane sugar. It's 100 percent vegan, kosher and from-scratch straight from Watertown, so you can scoop this stuff guiltlessly. The only trouble is choosing between flavors like a hot-meets-cold mango habanero, Bing-filled cherry amaretto or silky, always in-season avocado.

DINER
MY DINER

With its recent influx of young professionals and condos, the Lower End of Southie is starting to feel a little like the South End East. But the less-shiny old Southie lives on in the atmosphere of survivors like My Diner, which offers the same huge, hearty, cheap breakfasts it has for decades. A popular specialty is fresh-roasted turkey, including a turkey hash that just might ease the pain of the passing of Charlie's Sandwich Shoppe.

DINNER WITH A VIEW
SAM'S AT LOUIS

The Seaport draws throngs of suburbanites and conventioneers to its many new restaurants, most boasting lovely water vistas and swank dining rooms. But despite the coveted views, the food and drinks along Seaport and Northern Avenues don't always thrill us. Standing out from this touristy pack, perched above pricey, ultrachic clothier Louis, Sam's offers modern New American fare and cocktails that actually live up to its stunning patio and 270-degree panorama of Boston Harbor and the waterfront.

ETHIOPIAN

LUCY ETHIOPIAN CAFE

Every scroll of Lucy's injera tells a story. One night, it's written in fiery berbere sauce; on another, it's inked in the ruddy stain of red lentils. You can choose your own adventure by topping its spongy surface with your pick of veggie combos, or mountainous helpings of tibs—a stewy, hearty mix of beef and greens. Either way, finish with some peanut tea, a frothy elixir of milk and honey that makes for a very satisfying denouement.

FRENCH

BISTRO DU MIDI

We suggest taking your time at this Provençal palace. So allow that bottle of Bourgogne to breathe. Claim an order of the 60-minute roasted chicken, with ricotta and pine nuts stuffed beneath its skin. While that's sizzling, whet your whistle with spoonfuls of seasonal white asparagus soup, slightly smoky and poured over succulent escargots. And for dessert, allow 25 minutes for gravity-defying soufflés, or luxuriate in every candied crumb of raspberry-filled beignets, ideal for dunking in white chocolate sauce.

GASTROPUB

KIRKLAND TAP & TROTTER

For his second restaurant, Tony Maws traded Craigie's haute technique and white tablecloths for a wood-fired grill and a neighborhood vibe. The result? Instant success for little sib KT&T, filled to the rafters with merry revelers feasting on curry-rubbed lamb ribs and smoked fish rillettes, washing them down with Ommegang, Victory ale and Schlitz. The music isn't up too high: It's just a chorus of folks enjoying themselves. Those bringing appetites bigger than their budgets can partake in the nightly changing neighborhood menu, with three courses for $35.

GREEK

ESPERIA GRILL

The unprepossessing exterior of this Brighton Center storefront gives way to a surprisingly bounteous and fresh buffet assortment within, from classic cold and hot Greek meze (hummus, saganaki, keftedes) to avgolemono soup, Greek salads, rotisserie chicken and kabobs of beef and lamb. We're especially partial to its amazing pork gyros (popular in Greece, little-seen in the States), grilled to a crisp edge and sliced off the vertical rotisserie into beautifully chewy pita with thick, garlicky tzatziki.

HIDDEN GEM

GENE'S CHINESE FLATBREAD

This modest downtown storefront is Boston's only outlet for Shaanxi cuisine. Stick to dishes numbered 1 to 10 on its short menu: flatbread sandwiches, soups, stews and noodle dishes with pork, beef or lamb. It's hearty, savory food—add some brick-toned hot sauce for heat—made with great care for short money. The No. 9, cumin lamb topping noodles hand-pulled to order like so much taffy, might be the single most delicious plate of affordable comfort in the city.

JAPANESE

O Ya

Rumor has it that Tim Cushman may open another O Ya in New York. Lucky them if so, but we'll still have the Ladder District original, where we first discovered omakase—setting the bar for every grand tasting since. Melt-in-your-mouth wagyu and arctic char are as memorable as flourishes like watermelon pearls and umami-rich foie gras ponzu. Seventeen courses of superior knife skills and imaginative composition—this isn't dinner. It's a banquet.

NEW RESTAURANT

Alden & Harlow

After years as a mercenary chef, Michael Scelfo finally added "owner" to his title, and his overdue solo debut is a smash. Alden's array of shareable plates leans heavily on bold flavors, especially smoke, and achieves stunning effects even with (gasp!) vegetables: Few chefs could make charred broccoli on winter-squash hummus feel like a revelation. A cozy redo of Harvard Square's old Casablanca space and a first-rate beverage program nudge the year's freshest debut ahead of a very competitive field.

HOT DOG

Que Padre Taqueria y Mas

After observing a moment of silence for the late Gregg "Boston Super Dog" Gale, we offer a paean to an elaborate, unique wienie preparation from another humble purveyor. At this teensy East Boston taqueria, chef/owner Victor Duran plates a Sonoran-style hot dog: a bacon-wrapped frankfurter in a closed-end, split-top bun, nestling atop pinto beans, tomatoes and diced raw onions, topped with squiggles of mayo, yellow mustard and jalapeno sauce. It's all of four bucks, and it's fantastic.

INDIAN

India Quality

While we're grateful that Boston's traditional sub-continental restaurants offer more regional variety than ever—nice to see you, Indo-Chinese—this unimposing, long-running Kenmore Square venue continues to deliver the old-school goods: a comprehensive menu of familiar Punjabi and Mughal standards leavened with very good breads and the odd vindaloo or two. What keeps us coming back are its consistency, bargain-priced set-menu thalis, a nicer-than-usual selection of Indian and Western desserts and, above all, the sweet-natured hospitality of its veteran hosts.

ITALIAN

Prezza

In the turn-'em-and-burn-'em North End, few restaurants offer amenities like a full bar, reservations or dessert. Prezza offers all of these, plus sleek atmosphere, polished service and a serious Italian wine list. Chef/owner Anthony Caturano's cooking grew from his family roots in Abruzzo, evident in beautiful handmade pastas as well as terrific wood-fire steaks and chops. The sum of these parts is a modern, refined Northern Italian restaurant for locals who don't want to be treated like tourists.

LOBSTER ROLL

Belle Isle Seafood

The closest real clam shack to Boston is outside the city limits, just over the bridge that connects Eastie to Winthrop. The relentlessly humble Belle Isle has a fine retail seafood counter and serves impeccably fresh local fish and shellfish—grilled, baked or fried—along with shore-food classics like chowder, stuffies and fried clam rolls. Its lobster roll is canonical (cold, barely mayo-dressed), huge and brimming with tail, claw and knuckle meat, putting more conveniently located tourist joints to shame.

MEXICAN

El Centro

Need a date-night option that's more sophisticated than a taqueria, but can't abide the gringo cliches of Boston's upscale Mex places? The South End's El Centro offers a third way: It's intimate and pretty, pours the right beverages (wine and sangria, Mexican beers, tequila and margaritas), and best of all, serves up a more traditional and refined take on Mexican cuisine, including specialties from chef/owner Allan Rodriguez' native Sonora. Nobody wants to go home smelling like sizzling fajitas, anyway.

MIDDLE EASTERN
SARMA

The menu provides a helpful glossary of potentially unfamiliar terms, but the appeal of Sarma's exceptional meze—hot dates stuffed with goat cheese and dusted with harissa, a fava bean pâté of the richest, smoothest texture—requires no explanation. They draw droves to this quiet corner of Somerville, where rising star Cassie Piuma fearlessly seasons each dish with spices like cumin, saffron and za'atar. Sip a glass of effervescent Txakolina wine to keep your taste buds sharp between bites, and be sure to save some room for Greek frozen yogurt with toppings like Turkish coffee brownie.

PASTRY
Modern Pastry

There's nothing better on a hot summer night than a stroll down Hanover Street, following your nose into Modern Pastry for a creamy, cool dessert. Plain and chocolate-dipped cannoli are made to order, piped with fresh, mild ricotta, for results that are delicate, never soggy. If you prefer a nightcap, reach for a spongy, rum-soaked baba. And their handmade, crispy shells filled with custardy "lobster tail cream" blow rivals out of the water.

PHO
PHO LE VIETNAMESE CUISINE

In the Land of Noodle Soups, pho is surely queen, if not king. Its status derives from wondrous flavors and textures (aromatic broth, slurpable noodles, pungent fresh herbs, savory meats, crunchy sprouts, fiery chilies, bracing lime juice) and mystical morning-after restorative powers. Among Dorchester's many fine pho joints, Le stands out for its limpid, light, easy-on-the-MSG broths, sparkling yet humble dining room, and terrific dishes like duck salad and Vietnamese crêpes for when your crowd wants more than soup.

1356 Dorchester Ave., Boston (617-506-6294)

PICCO

This is the crust that aficionados live for. A two-day cold fermentation is the secret behind the dense yet airy dough, which is fired till it's dotted with dark, bubbly blisters. It's an optimal vehicle for fully loaded toppings, like the irresistible Alsatian's sweet-meets-smoky bed of caramelized onions and bacon niblets. Picco also churns its own ice cream, so you can pair your pie with an "adult" ice cream soda, a raspberry Lambic poured over housemade vanilla.

PLACE TO GO WHEN MONEY IS NO OBJECT
L'ESPALIER

Sturgeon caviar. Truffles. King salmon. L'Espalier's fare is what you'd find if rainbows ended in plates instead of pots of gold. Even its cheeses have resplendent names, like Fleur de Maquis—"Flower of the Brambles"—an herb-encrusted round made from Corsican sheep's milk. Sitting by the floor-to-ceiling windows overlooking Boylston Street, finishing a prix-fixe feast capped with petit fours like vanilla-rosewater marshmallows, you'll realize it's possible to feel like royalty—even if it's just for one night.

POP-UP
THE FUTURE OF JUNK FOOD

Indie chefs Samuel Monsour and Mark O'Leary have impressive resumes (including gigs at jm Curley and O Ya) and a wicked sense of humor. One of their cleverest recent projects is this pop-up series, which constructs simulacra of horrible mass-market crap from utterly delicious ingredients, such as a sandwich that echoes a McDonald's Filet-o-Fish by layering a Peekytoe crab patty and sea urchin in a squid-ink bun. It's mind-bending food, even if you don't get their subtle points about eating sustainably and responsibly.

This Fort Point hot spot has seafood down cold, expertly slicing, shucking, smoking and curing. It offers a stacked selection of shellfish, but let's talk about its namesake, the latest bivalve on the block. Harvested by the Island Creek Oysters team, the Row 34 is raised on crates that never touch the floor of Duxbury Bay. Refreshing as a cool clip of wind in August, they have a faintly nutty finish. Get a dozen to properly sample sauces like the frisky chili-cilantro mignonette. And, while you're at it, tack on an order of fluke crudo or snapper ceviche, in which you'll always find an exquisite balance of sprightly acids and fish.

SANDWICH
CUTTY'S

This tiny Brookline Village storefront had lines out the door even before omnipresent food-TV celebrity Guy Fieri showcased it on Diners, Drive-Ins and Dives. It's an even tougher ticket now, but worth the wait for its beautiful, artfully crafted sandwiches. Choosing a highlight from the dud-free menu is tough, but we'll nominate one for our lacto-vegetarian friends: meltingly tender Swiss chard and crispy shallots with saffron yogurt on excellent ciabatta—a fiercely flavored, slightly messy, truly original sandwich.

SEAFOOD
ISLAND CREEK OYSTER BAR

So much of ICOB's success has depended on adherence to its founding principle: Know your oyster farmers, clam diggers and fishermen. Because their sources have been personally vetted, the quality of those connections can be tasted in every dish—whether it's Mrs. Bennett's decadent seafood casserole, named for Island Creek Oysters founder Skip's mom, or grilled lobster atop buttery roe noodles, featuring crustaceans culled by chef/co-owner Jeremy Sewall's cousin. With general manager Tom Schlesinger-Guidelli heading up the hospitality side, you'll feel like family too.

SALADS
Stephi's in Southie

Often relegated to bit parts in appetizer sections, salads enjoy a starring role at Stephi's. This third outpost of the Stephanie's on Newbury empire has clearly hit its sweet spot with enormous, attractive, protein-laden entrees, like a pile of mandolined crunchy vegetables topped with grilled shrimp. They're a boon for locals looking for a healthy but satisfying dinner, perhaps after a session at the nearby Handle Bar or South Boston Yoga. It's a wonder more restaurants don't follow suit.

SOUTHERN HUNGRY MOTHER

Everything here is warm and rustic: Water is poured into Mason jars, the bathroom walls are papered with pages from cookbooks and grassy whorls of fiddleheads curlicue around entrees, incarnating springtime. The menu changes daily, but you'll always be invited south, with mainstays like sorghum-buttered cornbread and cocktails stirred with a bevy of bourbons.

SPANISH
TORO

Jamie Bissonnette and Ken Oringer took Toro to Manhattan last year, gambling that one of Boston's most successful restaurants could woo New Yorkers notoriously averse to carpetbaggers. Surprise: Toro V2.0 is a flaming success, but hasn't diffused the South End original's winning formula of swoony Barcelona-inspired tapas, great wines and cocktails, and service that somehow maintains its aplomb amid a never-abating throng. Please, please check out Toro NYC soon; we'd love just a little more room to squeeze in at the bar here.

STEAK HOUSE
GRILL 23

Grill 23 is still the boss of beef. It's always had excellent timing—tenderizing rib-eyes with a 100-day age, or pulling lavishly marbled 10-ounce Kobe caps from the flames just as they begin to blush, so every medallion is evenly crimson. And in honor of its 30th birthday, the Grill wisely invested in its future, unveiling a major renovation of its downstairs bar, where small plates are wallet-friendly and cask-strength single-malt flights can be sipped by the big picture windows.

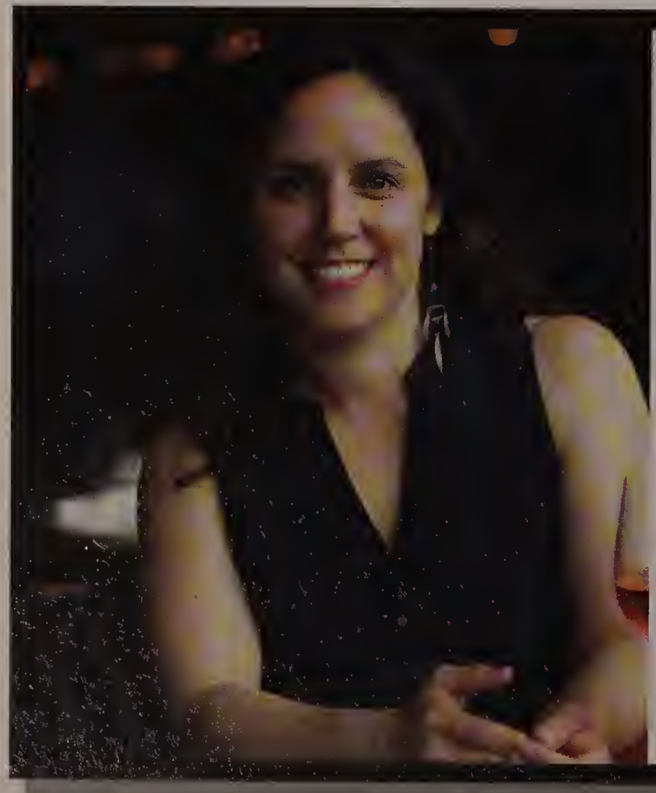
SUSHI
CAFE SUSHI



Its facade is unremarkably ordinary, its name straightforward, if not generic. You don't go here to be seen. You come for low-profile delicacies, like diaphanous amberjack sashimi, briny, billowy uni that will blow your mind, ambrosial ankimo (a luscious monkfish liver) and artfully constructed five-piece samplers of the freshest fish in season. Try to score a seat at the sushi bar so you can freely admire the chefs as they compose these game-changing creations.

THAI
THAI NORTH

Boston's best Southern Thai restaurants like S&I and Dok Bua are sometimes wary of letting non-Thai customers order the same fiery, funky dishes their Bangkok expat clientele loves. By contrast, this sweet little storefront specializes in Northern cuisine and is happy to have its customers explore. Skip the ordinary Southern menu here and go for the blackboard menu's Northern dishes like nam prik ong, duck larb and "dressing wings." It's a beautiful, delicious, strange new world.

SOMMELIER
Theresa Paopao at Ribelle

Tim Maslow's acclaimed, wildly creative Italian restaurant has a secret weapon in its sommelier, recruited from his days at Momofuku. Paopao is on a mission to inveigle customers down unlikely paths, like exploring the terra incognita of Austrian reds (Blaufränkisch grape, anyone?), or wheedling Sideways fans into giving California merlots another go. Our favorite Paopao gambit: listing by-the-glass options only with evocative descriptions of each wine's style, not its vintner or varietal. That's a trust fall every Ribelle customer should willingly take.

UNWELCOME TREND

EARSPLITTING NOISE IN DINING ROOMS

Almost every new restaurant in Boston now debuts with punishing noise levels. We understand the business justification for it: Quiet feels old and dead; liveliness equals good times! Plus, noise discourages table camping and enables more profit-driving table turns. But when your customers and staff go home hoarse after screaming all night, you've turned liveliness into hearing damage. Let's agree to a healthier noise maximum—say, quieter than a leaf blower. WE SAID, QUIETER THAN A LEAF BLOWER!

WELCOME TREND

SHAREABLE PLATES

Multicourse service based on individually plated appetizers, entrees and desserts had a good run of a hundred-plus years, but who wants to eat that way now? More Boston chefs are creating menus based on a variety of plate sizes, all meant for sharing. This is especially welcome at venues like Best New Restaurant winner Alden & Harlow, with a chef whose inventiveness and skill cries for broader sampling. Yes, we'll have a bite of this, that, that, that, that and that.

WINGS

CLERYS

Your order arrives with welcome fixings of carrot and celery sticks, as well as homemade blue cheese. But lo, these aren't your everyday Buffalo wings. Call it Clerys' ABCs of finger-lickin' good: Their wings are Air-dried, Baked and then served extra Crispy, slathered in sauce. Unlike deep-fried buckets of grease, these red-hot wings burst with juice once you pierce the skin. This is premium poultry.

TORTA

Tenoch Mexican

On most Mexican menus, burritos and tacos hog the spotlight while tortas, complicated sandwiches served on crusty telera rolls, lurk meekly in the corner. Tenoch pushes its tortas to center stage, where they absolutely shine. Layered with smoky-hot chipotle mayo, pickled onions, avocado and melty queso Oaxaca, any of Tenoch's meat options are terrific, but the standout is the campechana, a hefty combination of carnitas (braised, crisped pork shoulder), chorizo and beans. You may never bother with a burrito again.

VEGETARIAN/VEGAN

Root

Sitting on Allston's Vegetarian Row, Root serves an appealing combination of vibrant fresh juice drinks, sandwiches, salads and sides—all vegan, though you might not notice from the menu or signage. A sunny little counter-service storefront with youthful trappings (like a wall of bicycle wheels), Root turns out superb fries, a killer sweet-potato quesadilla, terrific liege waffles (at brunch) and maybe the best veggie burger in Boston. BACK BAY

THE SALTY PIG

The Back Bay has plenty of tony white-tablecloth joints for affluent tourists and businesspeople with expense accounts, but where's a hardworking local supposed to get a decent meal? This funky, multilevel gastropub is the answer. The Pig boasts a great selection of porky housemade charcuterie, some strong cheeses, fine wood-fired pizzas, a few hearty pastas and entrees, well-chosen wines by the glass and a terrific beer selection. It's a relaxed, affordable godsend in a sometimes stuffy, pricey neighborhood.

BEACON HILL

THE PARAMOUNT

Open every day that ends in "y," for breakfast, lunch and dinner, the Paramount has been around since 1937, yet there will still be a line out the door this weekend—with folks waiting however long it takes for giant malted Belgian waffles and pulpy, freshly squeezed orange juice. By night, candles flicker on the tables, and the Beacon Hillers who flock in face the hardest decision they'll have to make all day: choosing between those prized tenderloin tips and the evening's special. Good thing they can come back tomorrow.

BROOKLINE

FAIRSTED KITCHEN

Adding to a suddenly-very-interesting Brookline restaurant scene, Fairsted Kitchen leads with its heart, which is to say, places an extraordinary emphasis on making customers feel loved and appreciated through assiduous hospitality. The kitchen follows the share-everything model and draws delectably from American nose-to-tail cookery, the Mediterranean and Eastern Europe. A very strong cocktail, wine and beer program, late hours, weekend brunch and a terrific patio complete the picture of an exceptionally charming, useful neighborhood place.

CENTRAL SQUARE

CENTRAL KITCHEN

In Cambridge's ever-changing nucleus of a neighborhood, there's still a special draw to Central Kitchen, a seven-nights-a-week stalwart where low-key, dimly lit environs complement unfussy bistro-style fare. A colossal cluster of mussels is topped with a teepee of thinly hand-cut fries, advantageously positioned for broth-dipping. And the tuna tartare will take you back to that grade-school lesson on layers of soil—only in this case, it's edible strata of awesome in its rows of tapenade, pristine tuna and crumbly hard-boiled egg.

MANSFIELD & WAREHAM CROSSINGS

CHARLESTOWN
NAVY YARD BISTRO

Someone once told us that Bostonians are cold and unfriendly. They've obviously never spent an evening at the Navy Yard, where regulars are warmly remembered and first-timers feel instantly at home. A friendly staff is the source of this welcoming vibe, further enkindled by hits-the-spot staples—buttermilk-fried oysters with crispy nuggets of andouille, ginger-sake salmon that will flake away on your fork. After you reluctantly finish your last glass of delicious housemade sangria, you can stroll the shipyard's piers to take in spectacular views of downtown.

DAVIS SQUARE
POSTO

In its cozy, roaring space, Posto is first and foremost a (literally) certified maker of Neapolitan-style pizzas, and they are lovely, bubbly, thin-crusted wonders. But the kitchen's gifts extend much further, turning out great, simple antipasti, pretty plates of pasta and elegant meat and seafood entrees. When your neighborhood is as diverse as Davis, with its students, hipsters, professionals and families, it takes a menu as multifaceted as Posto's to be the neighborhood Italian restaurant for all of them.

DORCHESTER

Variety may be the spice of life. But when you're in Dot and it's dinnertime, it's difficult to want to go anywhere other than Tavolo. First, it's dependable. Trademark meatballs with a hint of fennel take homemade spaghetti to new heights. And it's almost too easy to polish off the antipasto, a pleasantly crowded party of roasted red pepper, mozzarella and prosciutto. Above all, its ambience is laid-back and fun—the kind of place you could bring anyone, so long as they're hungry.

DOWNTOWN CROSSING/FIDI
MARLIAVE

Chef/owner Scott Herritt rescued the crumbling wreck of a senescent downtown dining institution, removing a hundred years' worth of renovations to restore its handsome 19th-century looks. His menu features a good raw bar, classics from American, French and Italian cooking, and a few well-executed throwbacks (like superb rarebits). With two cozy bars and a sunny, secluded patio, Marliave now functions as a versatile, crowd-pleasing hangout for tourists, nearby office and government workers and locals from the increasingly residential neighborhood.

ALLSTON/BRIGHTON
Lone Star Taco Bar

It's a late night at Lone Star: Urban coyotes are saddled up at the bar, and some men with fresh ink on their arms order a round of Micheladas. Your neighbor is chowing down on beef barbacoa, and its smoky scent is hitting you like a barbecue in July. So lasso a salt-rimmed margarita—the El Diablo will put a little hair on your chest with its jalapeno and habanero. Then rob a freight train of a taco, say, the grilled avocado, loaded up with a slab of griddled queso like a melting brick of gold.

THE GREENWAY

Nebo

Last summer, sisters Carla and Christine Pallotta moved their beloved bambino from one end of the Greenway to the other. Installed in their stylish new digs on Atlantic Avenue, they've maintained everything good about the North End original: rustic hand-cranked pastas, their famous zucchini lasagna and more than a dozen antipasti to indulge every possible craving—say, creamy burrata with salty speck, or grilled lemon spritzed over golden calamari. Expanded drink and dessert offerings have only sweetened the recipe.

EAST BOSTON

RINO'S PLACE

As a rare vestige of Italian-American Eastie, Boston's original landing pad for Italian immigrants, Rino's embodies the virtues of many popular North End restaurants: giant plates of red-sauce fare with heaps of housemade pasta on the side. But the cognoscenti know the real gold here is in chef/owner Anthony DiCenso's daily specials drawn from more traditional Italian cuisine, like a stunning osso bucco Milanese on saffron risotto. Little wonder the lines are three hours long on weekends.

AUDUBON BOSTON

Audubon Circle—long beloved by pre- and post-game Sox fans, BU students and Brookline neighbors—recently changed hands to become Audubon Boston. In: the management team behind Silvertone and Trina's/Parlor Sports, bringing a tighter focus on craft cocktails and hospitality. Preserved: the great little patio, a solid menu of casual American fare and the room's uncluttered look. Out: the notoriously hazardous Pointy Table of Death. It's a welcome refresh, if not quite a reboot.

KENDALL SQUARE

Commonwealth

Once you venture outside steak house territory, it's pretty gutsy to let your proteins stand alone and encourage guests to choose sides of starch and veggies. But Steve "Nookie" Postal has every reason to feel confident in his restaurant/market's build-your-own-dinner program. Mains are cooked to perfection: Red snapper and flat iron steak are never at war with excess ingredients or drowning in sauce. They are just mindfully, lovingly, expertly prepared. Simplicity done so well is uncommon indeed.

NICOLE POPMA

PASTORAL

Todd Winer's maiden solo voyage emphasizes fine Neapolitan-style pizzas from a gorgeous wood-fired oven, superb housemade pastas and a very good cocktail, wine and beer program. Comfortably set in a raucous, rawboned former warehouse, it complements an increasingly magnetic cluster of restaurants and bars, including Drink, Tavern Road, Row 34 and Blue Dragon. In so doing, it has helped cement Fort Point's growing distinction as food-nerd central.

HARVARD SQUARE
HARVEST

Harvest has always had a sense of refinement, with its linens and its private terrace shaded by linden trees. But it's the understated sense of play that we love most. Scituate scallops pop in a vividly verdant pea puree; a ruby streak of vinaigrette blazes beside a woozy poached farm egg. These are lively, flirtatious dishes, and, in large part, they're made from local ingredients: Recently, tendrilled lettuce came from Apple Street Farms in Essex, and a crèmeux dessert featured chocolate from Somerville's Taza and sea salt sourced from nearby waters.

44 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-868-2255) harvestcambridge.com

PURITAN & CO.

Not a single detail has been overlooked. Oven-warm Parker House rolls land with sea salt-speckled butter. Ask for a recommendation from the funky, thoughtful wine list and you'll discover little-known stunners like bright Sicilian Occhipintis. Crudites showcase handsome veggies, like carrots recently pulled from the dirt, pure as a scene from Peter Rabbit. And seasonal suppers—be it short ribs or Muscovy duck—are so beautifully and precisely plated, you may be tempted to ask chef/owner Will Gilson if he's going to art

NORTH END

Neptune Oyster

Neptune recalls the Yogi Berra crack "Nobody goes there anymore; it's too crowded." But the fact is everybody goes there, and often, because, despite its lack of an Italian accent, it's still the best reason to visit the North End. Further, with its nonpareil raw bar, chowder, crudi, lobster rolls, cooked seafood dishes and seafood-friendly wines, and despite a slew of hot new competitors, Neptune remains one of the best New England seafood joints in the entire city.

JAMAICA PLAIN

TRES GATOS

The aptly named Tres Gatos is a triple threat. In the record shop and bookstore at the back, you can hang with vinyl versions of Hank Williams and Etta James, or browse for your next beach read. And by the kitchen, high-tops are primed for perching over pinchos and tapas. The bocadillo is outstanding, flaunting a juicy, griddle-seared lamb patty and a homemade roll that's flecked with freshly ground pepper.

UNION SQUARE

Bronwyn

Tim Wiechmann plugged a large hole in Boston's collection of world cuisines when he opened this creative but respectful tribute to German, Austrian, Hungarian, Slovakian, Czech, Polish and Alpine Italian fare. Beautiful breads, dumplings and noodles vie with roasts, cutlets and heaps of delectable housemade sausages to recreate the heft and heartiness of Mitteleuropean foods. The great beer selection (and beer garden in which to enjoy it) and regional wines are no surprise—the arty cocktail program is.

NEWTON
LUMIÈRE

If you do nothing else today, look up directions to Lumière. Then commit them to memory. French for "light," it gives humanely raised bounty a chance to shine—maybe it's a Barnegat scallop varnished with smoked paprika sauce, or mustard-crusted Chatham bluefish. Chef/owner Michael Leviton was championing all things seasonal and sustainable long before it was the rage, so the carte du jour is always an enticing surprise.

PORTER SQUARE
GIULIA

Another veteran chef goes solo and achieves awe-inspiring results. Michael Pagliarini opened his rustic-looking Italian restaurant to quick acclaim, and anyone who has sampled his nightly assortment of hand-crafted pastas knows why. The chef emphasizes traditional preparations, as in orecchiette with extraordinary housemade pork sausage, but adds the occasional of-the-moment frisson, like whey-braised rabbit on emmer farro casarecce. And he has wisely brought along hits from past gigs, like a superb vegetable antipasto. The net effect is a lovely, homey, heart-warming affair.

SEAPORT
LEGAL HARBORSIDE

Part of the cachet of this waterfront phenom is that it's three restaurants in one, with each floor catering to a different mood. Yet consistently satisfying vittles are served from the roof-deck down. The roof itself is retractable, so you can bask in the sun with sushi and a pitcher of sangria, watching planes fly into Logan across the water. More upscale is the second floor, where shrimp cocktail chills in an elegant igloo. And the first floor is comfortably casual, serving a stellar crabmeat salad and throwback odes, like the Portuguese seafood stew from the original Legal's in Inman Square.

270 Northern Ave., Boston (617-477-2900) legalseafoods.com

SOUTH BOSTON
CAFE PORTO BELLO

Southie has many glossy new hangouts catering to its booming millennial population; the other Southie, of locals who grew up in the houses they still live in, favors this overlooked gem. Porto Bello features the kind of unfussy Italian-American fare that our grandparents loved: good pizza, groaning plates of pasta, veal and chicken parm. The room, like the wine list, is small and modest, the service sassy and unpretentious. It's an echo of an older, tighter-knit South Boston.

672 E. Broadway, Boston (617-269-7680) cafeportobello.net

SOUTH END
MERRILL & CO.

The newest hot spot from the jm Curley team boasts diner-esque trappings and the vibe of a raucous neighborhood tavern. Its kitchen focuses on refined bar snacks, interesting vegetables dishes, New England seafood and raw-bar offerings; the friendly staff serves it up with studied casualness. With its strong cocktail program, geek-worthy beers, approachable wines and sherries, bevy of shareable plates, great patio and scads of bar and communal seating, Merrill represents a distillation of this moment in dining.

1 Appleton St., Boston (617-728-0728) merrillandcoboston.com

THEATER DISTRICT
OSTRA

In a neighborhood that knows plenty about dramatic entrances, Ostra has made quite the splash. Its setting is immaculate: Whole fish repose on an ice bed flanking a polished open kitchen, and horseshoe crab-imprinted chargers anchor tables in the white-columned dining room. The equally gorgeous (and totally delicious) seafood is served Mediterranean-style—the branzino is baked in salt, the sea bream anointed with extra-virgin olive oil. As piano music drifts from the lounge, you get the sense that you're dining on some distant shore, where it wouldn't be at all surprising to find a pearl in your oyster.

Best-Kept Secret // pg. 83

BEER BAR
LORD HOBO

It dresses down like a dive bar. But behind the lo-fi veneer, Lord Hobo is an impressive haven for those serious about their beer. Drum your fingers to a soundtrack of throwback alt-rock, put full faith in the suggestions of your mustachioed barkeep and sip a rotating selection of craft suds from 40 draft lines and nearly as many bottles. (Real example: Funky Buddha Brewery's PB&J-inspired "No Crusts.") You'll feel like a flannel-clad king.

92 Hampshire St., Cambridge (617-250-8454) lordhobo.com

BEST-KEPT SECRET
SPEAKEASY AT CARRIE NATION

Psst! Slink through the thick crowd of industry types in the main room of Carrie Nation, named for the hatchet-wielding, barroom-smashing matriarch of the early temperance movement. Down a rear hall, peel back burgundy curtains to reveal a shadowy, speakeasy-style "cocktail club" that opens at 5 pm each night. This cozy hideaway is where the locals go and whiskey flows around billiard tables. Nation herself might succumb to its charms.

11 Beacon St., Boston (617-227-3100) carrienationcocktailclub.com

ROYALE

Even as EDM mania grows, the national nightclub scene has downsized to the more intimate "ultra-lounge" experience. Royale, though, still does everything big. Red Bull-hyped throngs fill the king-sized venue to hear superstar global DJs amid flashing lights and house dancers decked out in DayGlo. Its partnership with the Bowery Presents: Boston books an exciting lineup of live acts, too.

279 Tremont St., Boston (617-338-7699) royaleboston.com

BAR-HOPPING SPOT
One Kendall Square

Remember when Cambridge's Kendall Square was a ghost town after 5 pm? Now, neither do we. Partly thanks to the vibrant startup culture, longtime stalwarts like Flat Top Johnny's and Cambridge Brewing Company have been joined by relative newcomers serving all sorts of libations: vividly described vino at Belly Wine Bar, quirky pitcher drinks at Southern-inspired nouveau-dive State Park, and classy but creative cocktails (beet-infused mezcal?) at West Bridge. Many options, one plaza—just watch your step between stops.

DANCE NIGHT
SOULELUJAH

On Saturday nights, the tight quarters of Central Square's ZuZu teem with skinny jeans and big, funky beats for Soulelujah. DJs dig deep in the crates for the juiciest cuts of soul, Motown, vintage R&B and (non-camp) disco ever committed to wax, getting sweat-drenched heads to bob and Chuck Taylors to tap. For retro record lovers, it's heaven—for novices, an important old-school education. Can we get an amen?

474 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-864-3278) zuzubar.com

DIVE BAR
CHARLIE'S KITCHEN

With its neon-filled windows and worn walls of white diner tile, this beloved beer and (deliciously sloppy) burger dive is a vestige of Harvard Square's hardcore punk-rock days. There are still some grizzled old-timers, but the mohawks of yore have been replaced by students and neighborhood hipsters who spin Morrissey on the jukebox, gorge on greasy-spoon eats and tip back cold suds in a badass beer garden.

GAY SCENE

DON'T ASK, DON'T TELL AT GREAT SCOTT

Every month, this sickening (that's good) soiree thumbs its glitter-speckled nose at more mainstream gay nights dominated by neatly pressed polo shirts and pop-princess soundtracks. Here drag queens preen, artsy club kids strut in skin-flashing ensembles, experimental video art hypnotizes and musically curious DJs spin shimmering era- and genre-spanning anthems. A queer sensibility certainly pervades, but the creative culture and come-as-you-are ethos welcome anyone who lives loud and in color.

HOTEL BAR

HIGHBALL LOUNGE

We love a bar that boasts a serious cocktail program—but doesn't take itself too seriously. This lounge at Nine Zero Hotel has industry cred thanks to creative, aromatic bevvies served in a sophisticated wood-paneled den. (Nor does it slouch on bar bites, with hot dogs and other funky fare devised by star chef Ken Oringer.) Yet hip DJs, board games, View-Master menus and rubber-ducky drink garnishes lend goofy, Gen Y-skewing charm.

IRISH BAR

J.J. FOLEY'S CAFE

Often billed as Boston's oldest family-owned Irish bar, Foley's lines its walls with photographic evidence of the motley crews that have warmed its stools since Guinness pints started pouring in 1909: dealmaking politicos, scoop-scouting reporters and area barflies who know this South End icon from its undistinguished sibling downtown. Today, old-timers and young couples representing the neighborhood's new blood clink glasses together. Sláinte!

LESBIAN SCENE

MIDWAY CAFE

Women-centric options are slim in Boston's LGBT bar scene, but this JP watering hole's diverse devotees include a strong lesbian crowd. On Thursdays, friendly faces file in for Women's Dance Night, which features amateur warbling at Queeraoke. But cheap drinks, an eclectic music lineup and a relaxed vibe ensure that Midway can lure them back every night of the week.

DRINKS WITH A VIEW

Top of the Hub

It's easy to take certain landmarks for granted, or even demote them to tourist-trap status. That's unfair. When sharing a sunset cocktail amid strains of jazz at the skyscraping Top of the Hub, it's impossible to deny the allure of its wondrous, one-of-a-kind vantage point of our city. A famed date spot for a reason, it's also a place to rekindle the romance with your other true love. Because Boston, baby—you look beautiful tonight.

PATIO BAR
STERLING'S

The rat race always kept downtown Boston busy from 9 to 5. But thanks to a spate of exciting new openings, the area is getting foot traffic after office hours. And this spacious (no, huge) patio makes for perfect people watching. Inside, sleek woods and fancy light fixtures telegraph a handsome midcentury cocktail bar, but bring those 'tinis outside to take in fresh air and Sterling's buzzing social scene.

PLACE TO DRINK ALONE
21ST AMENDMENT

The spirit of this historic Beacon Hill tavern lends itself to sipping solo as well as to socializing. If you want to rub shoulders with neighborhood regulars or play trivia with State House workers, it's that Boston landmark where everybody (actually) knows your name. But a come-and-go breeziness allows truly anyone seeking solitude to grab a pint and get lost in the crowd. Here, it's said, JFK wrote speeches undisturbed in a cozy corner booth.

NEW ADDITION
Hopsters Brew & Boards

If you dig the DIY beer-making movement but aren't willing to turn your living room into a microbrewery, Hopsters offers a fairly brilliant solution. Swing by to formulate a recipe and fill your kettle with the right hops and malts to make three cases of beer. (You'll return later to bottle it.) Between steps, stay inspired by sampling craft cold ones at the bar, or dive into ploughman's platters of artisanal meats and cheeses.

THE LOWER DEPTHS TAP ROOM

Let the tourists mob those besieged bars on Lansdowne and Brookline. This subterranean Kenmore Square spot is for beer lovers with better taste, anyway. There are more than 150 varieties of draft, can and bottled craft brews, plus kitschy-but-quality grub like tater tot platters and the "White Trash Fenway Frank." (It's topped with beer cheese.) But bring some green before you hit the game: Lower Depths is cash-only.

PRE/POST-TD GARDEN BAR
PORTERS BAR AND GRILL

Whether they're pregaming for the Celtics or killing time before a concert, Porters is a favorite stop-over for Garden guests. After all, its strong, straightforward American pub fare, in particular a wide array of juicy burgers, helps to sop up the suds tipped back in final-period celebration. And in defeat? Well, nothing soothes the wounds like a warm bar stool, a cold beer and neighbors who know your pain.

BRAHMIN

Don't let the genteel name fool you. Top buttons come undone, ties get loosened and, to the tune of weekend DJs, fists get pumped at this fun Back Bay magnet for 20-something professionals. After-work crowds file in for cocktails and dressed-up takes on American tavern fare—but as the night rolls on, the air gets thick with schmoozing, boozing and a little red-blooded (not blue-blooded) bumping and grinding.

Cocktails and Wine on Tap

Here's a bar trend we'll toast to: draft lines devoted to cocktails and wine. Hip newcomers like Alden & Harlow, Fairsted Kitchen and Warehouse Bar and Grille made room for them straight out of the gate, and Fort Point-based company Richer Pour, a purveyor of wine-on-tap technology, is helping established spots like Stella and Sonsie ride the wave. Is the allure from more affordable pours or the promise of deeper or fresher flavor? Who cares—just go with the flow.

SINGLES' SCENE, OVER 30

OAK LONG BAR + KITCHEN

With its 2012 renovation, the Fairmont Copley's storied Oak Room traded traditional hotel opulence for modern chic—and transformed into a sleeker, sexier and more confident version of itself. (Sort of like you entering your 30s.) Now cocktail-sipping singles flirt around the central copper-topped bar and whisper in tufted leather club seats. Enduringly elegant pre-renovation details—coffered ceilings, dramatic windows—remain as attractive reminders of history, not age.

SPORTS BAR

PARLOR SPORTS

Behold, a sports bar for people who aren't into sports bars. Cut from similar cloth as its sibling neighbor, hipster-friendly Trina's Starlite Lounge, Parlor Sports has way fewer meatheads and much better food and drink than the average gameday destination for sports fans. Plenty of flat-screen TVs ensure that you won't miss the action, but food-nerd takes on stadium fare (like pickle-brined chicken strips and a corn dog with honey mustard) are attention-grabbing on their own.

WATERING HOLE FOR THE WELL-HEELED

BOND AT THE LANGHAM

Considering that Bond is housed in the former Federal Reserve Bank, it's no surprise that this sexy nightspot is where deep pockets go to splurge on bottle service (perhaps in the balcony's private Dom Perignon Lounge) and internationally inspired bites. Swathed in opulent red and gold, the swank, dramatic chamber booms with bass from rotating DJs, who get expensive stilettos stomping across the floor's original inlaid bank seal. Old Boston—meet young money.

WINE BAR

SPOKE

Old World wines dominate the list at this Davis Square favorite, but the atmosphere is unmistakably modern. Sleek wood fixtures and lush felt-covered walls (surprisingly adept sound absorbers) create an intimate cocoon of a wine bar, where unstuffy oenophiles find a meticulously curated wine menu accompanied by sophisticated (and gorgeous!) small plates like fried Vermont quail and branzino crudo.

DAVIS SQUARE

Foundry on Elm

The gastropub foundation garners a European flourish at this tavern-slash-brasserie. Anchored by a 43-foot Italian marble bar, 30-something crowds go to work on rotating cask ales, barrel-aged cocktails and bottles of wine that complement a similarly sophisticated yet accessible menu of transatlantic fare. For darker woods and a more deeply American spirit, descend to sibling spot Saloon and try the bourbon-based Gold Rush.

NEIGHBORHOODS

DEEP ELLUM

Burgeoning trends live on the fringe. With its motley mix of college activists, musicians and (still-idealistic) 20-somethings, Allston is fertile ground for discovery, from uncovering hot bands to experimenting with Instagram filters. The craft beer renaissance has since spread far and wide, but Deep Ellum was a very early entry in that scene. It's still the best, drawing national notice for its big, badass selection—which, incidentally, looks best in Lo-fi.

BEACON HILL

THE TIP TAP ROOM

It's all in the name at chef/owner Brian Poe's boisterous spot on Beacon Hill's backside. The titular tips are creatively prepared using familiar favorites like chicken and lamb, unexpected options such as tofu and swordfish, and a daily wild-game special. Taps, meanwhile, number in the 30s, with twice that amount in bottles and cans. With meat, beer and merrymaking, Tip Tap puts a spring in the step.

BROOKLINE
THE PUBLICK HOUSE

A bar for beer geeks who blanch at the term "beer geeks." Its got one of the best beer lists around, with everything from locally brewed upstarts to intriguing Belgian drafts (the specialty of the "Monk's Cell," an abbey-evoking bar-within-a-bar). Pub food such as BBQ-spiced pork belly soars to heavenly heights, even as the pretense-free Publick House remains totally down to earth.

CENTRAL SQUARE
GREEN STREET GRILL

Discreetly tucked away from the main strip of Mass. Ave bars, this unassuming haunt hides behind a spare brick exterior. Inside, masterful mixologists create more than 100 cocktails from the massive "A to Z cocktail book," a menu offered by request and helpfully sorted alphabetically. But don't underestimate the carefully selected wines—or the food, an upscale-lowbrow mix as well-balanced as a perfect cocktail.

CHARLESTOWN
THE WARREN TAVERN

Colonial history is at the heart of Charlestown's charm, and this watering hole is part of its lifeblood. (With a very high BAC.) It's known for being Paul Revere's favorite bar, and George Washington's funeral speech was given here. So tip out a bit of your Washington Apple Martini with locals, tourists and anyone else who appreciates what ye oldest Bay State bar has to offer: rich history in humble digs.

DORCHESTER
DBAR

Before opening Boston Chops and Deuxave, executive chef Chris Coombs introduced himself at this swanky little cocktail lounge and restaurant, which raised the bar for dining in Dot. He's branched out, but devotees of this oasis amid beer bars aren't going anywhere. It's still a special go-to for the gay community, which packs weekend dance parties and keeps good times roaring at theme nights like Show Tune Tuesdays.

DOWNTOWN CROSSING
The Merchant

Everyone at the Merchant has something to sell. The kitchen team: a strong menu of American brasserie fare. The bar staff: terrific cocktails and more than 60 beers, half on draft. The post-6 pm suits that swarm here to drink them: insurance, probably. (Maybe mutual funds.) We're fully invested in this jumping new joint, where the 40-foot bar's standing-room-only crowds capture what a revitalized downtown should be: a commerce-friendly crossroads.

FENWAY/KENMORE
CITIZEN PUBLIC HOUSE & OYSTER BAR

You can't bunt without hitting a bar near Fenway Park. But the handsome, parlor-like Citizen scores by offering one of the city's best craft cocktail programs, tended to by suspenders-clad bartenders. There are also 200-plus whiskeys, with weekly rotating flights, and you'll usually find groups gathered around the kitchen's famous whole-animal roasts. Buffalo wings and big-screens, this is not.

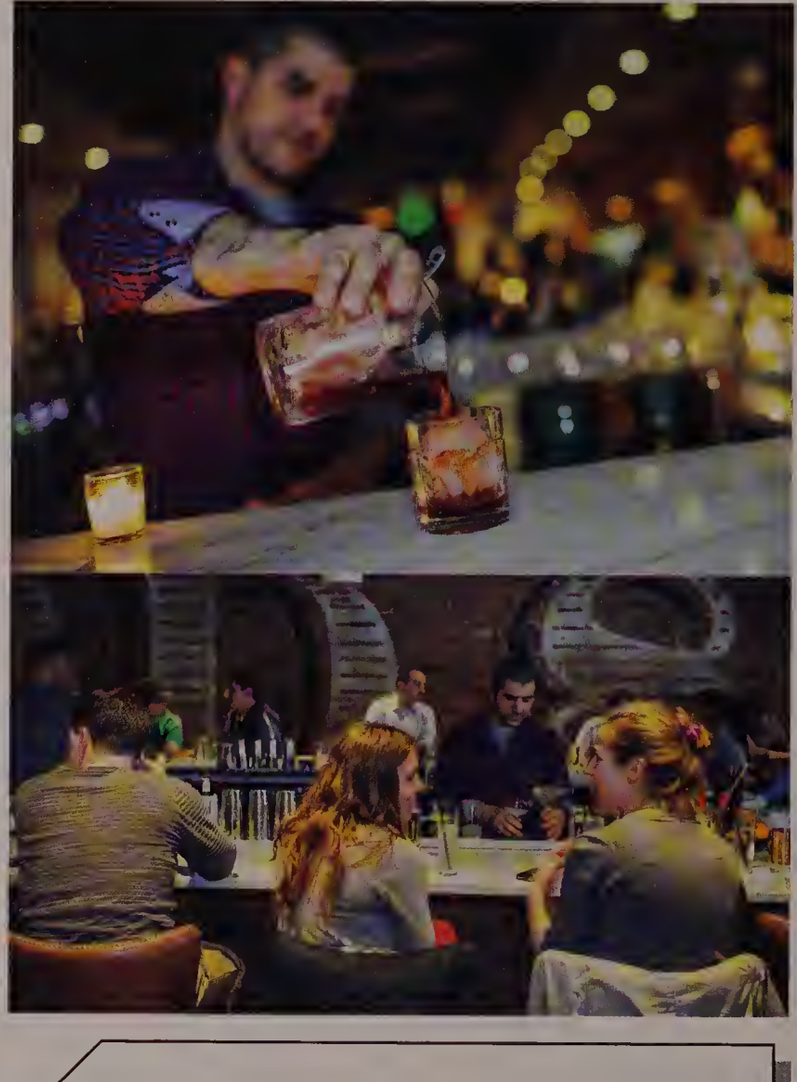
FINANCIAL DISTRICT
VINTAGE RESTAURANT AND LOUNGE



It's an all-new Vintage, reopened this spring with a fresh interior and elevated menu under new chef Hugh Carlton Buckley. (And with 500-plus wines, pairings shouldn't be a problem.) A convivial patio hosts cocktails and chatter, while guests inside mingle between the lounge, built in 1805, and the dining room and bar area, built in 2006—because with a little update, the best of the old and new can sit side by side.

DRINK

Fort Point has become a food-and-drink destination in recent years, and chef/mogul Barbara Lynch helped put it on the map with this perennially cool cornerstone of the Hub's craft cocktail scene, where some of Boston's brightest bartenders cut their teeth under beverage guru and historian John Gertsen. Custom libations, industry-baiting Tiki Nights and an off-menu, limited-availability burger of Barbara-level greatness impart in-the-know awesomeness.

NORTH END
Ward 8

With a cozy restaurant scene drenched in red sauce and redder wine, the North End has plenty of places for couples to canoodle. Singles? You'll find them gathering around the 30-seat white marble bar at this uncharacteristically (for the neighborhood) contemporary spot, where hotshot beverage director Mike Wyatt serves up a serious cocktail program. It includes the eponymous Ward 8, a whiskey cocktail born in 1898 at the late and venerable Boston institution Locke-Ober.

HARVARD SQUARE
GRENDEL'S DEN

You started in Harvard Square, but one right turn, and you're suddenly in Middle-earth. Or so this hobbit-hole-like hideaway might lead you to believe. (As would the professors, students and charming nerds debating the sociopolitical import of The Lord of the Rings.) Hearty spreads like the Beggar's Banquet, offered half-price during certain happy hours, are washed down with frothy pints of eclectic beers. Grendel's name nods to Beowulf, and this place is pretty epic.

Without its own Red Line stop, Inman often gets overlooked. Good. JAMAICA PLAIN
BRENDAN BEHAN PUB

In crunchy JP, the come-as-you-are spirit extends to what many consider the best, most authentic Irish bar in Boston. (Sit down, Southie.) Ireland's Sunday Tribune once named it Boston's best watering hole, so there's true Éire-given cred, and the live music often includes traditional Irish seisúns. There's no kitchen here, but the genial staff lets you bring your own food. (Seriously.) The cash-only policy is a small price to pay.

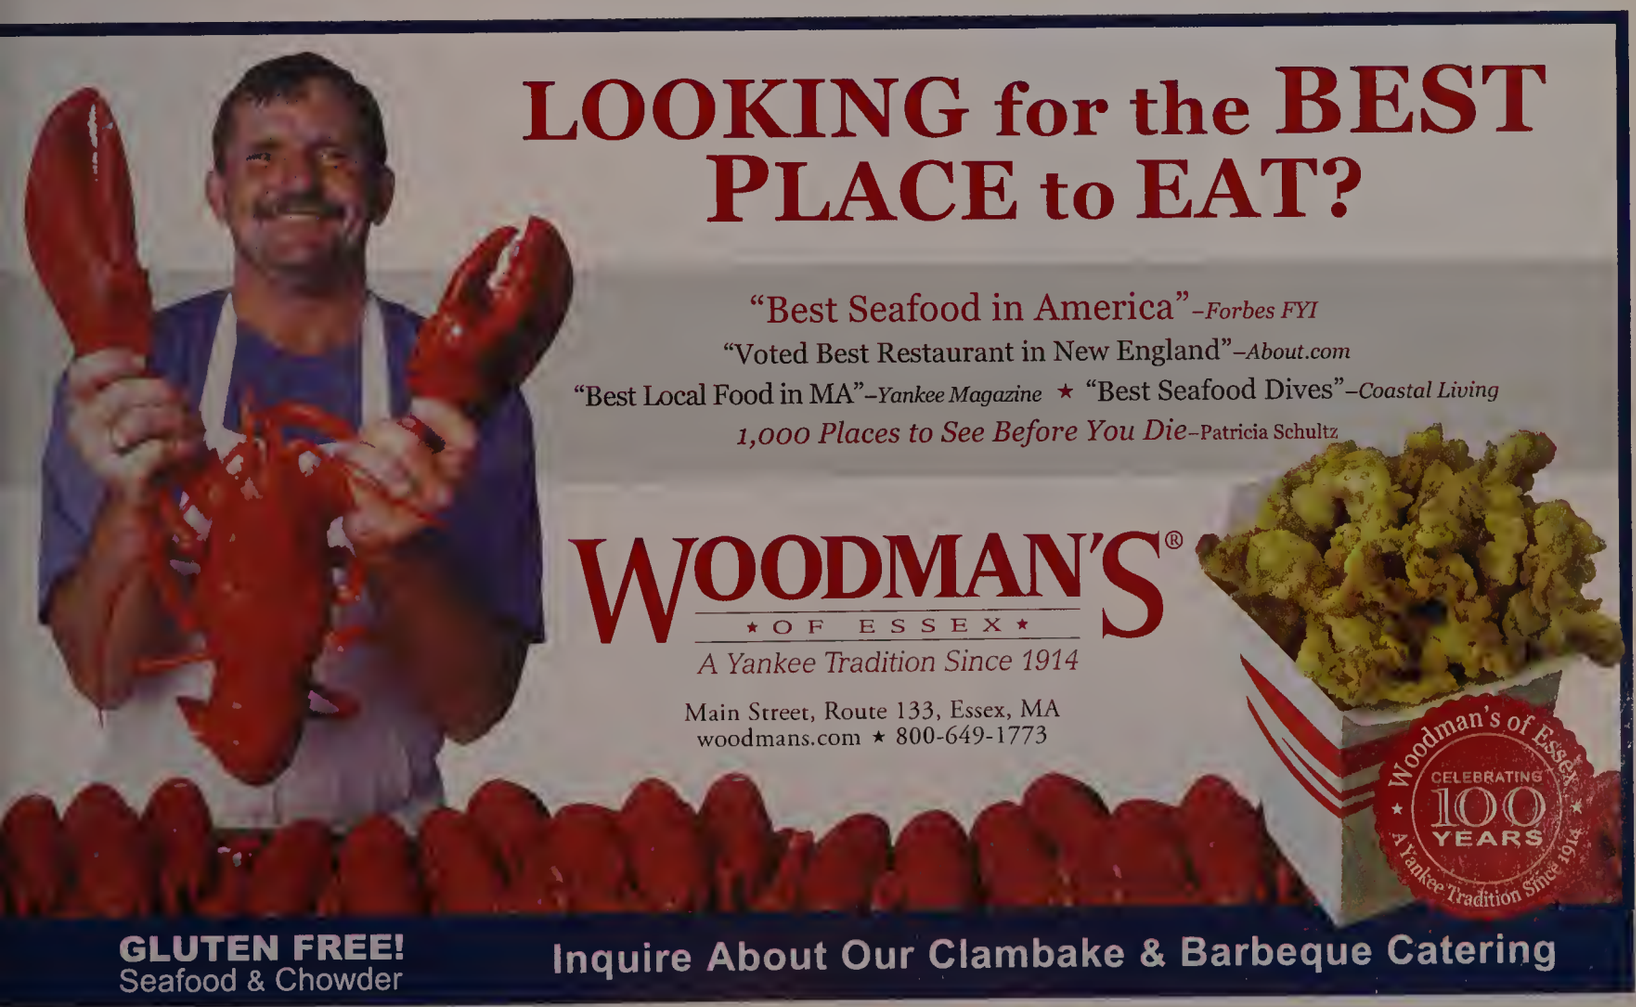
MEADHALL



Like a beer-soaked beacon, Meadhall lures an enterprising crowd from Kendall Square's startup scene. Plenty of inspiration is found at the expansive oval bar with more than 100 taps, including familiar favorites and unique microbrews. (Discover even more at an upstairs mezzanine bar.) SOUTH BOSTON
LINCOLN TAVERN & RESTAURANT

The spirit of the "new" (read: hipper) Southie runs high at this designer-label version of a neighborhood tavern. Two bars, each running the length of the dining room, hum with the area's influx of young couples and recent transplants. And though cocktails like the bourbon- and maple-rich Quiet Man sound appropriately grizzled, the space is made for Sunday brunchers who know more about Johnny Depp than Whitey Bulger.

SOUTH END
The Beehive

Sure, some cocktailing couples hang by the upstairs bar, but most descend into the subterranean hive of exposed brick and velvety drapes, one that looks like a love nest for a beat poet and a kooky cancan girl from the Moulin Rouge. There's a dining room, another bar and cabaret seating by a small stage where jazz divas croon. And they're all full. Years after other hot spots lost their allure, this place is still buzzing.

ACTRESS

Obehi Janice

Actress and playwright Obehi Janice has two first names and talent to spare. Just 26 years old, she was one of three women selected for this year's XX PLAYLAB, a program that supports the development of new work by promising female playwrights. The result: Fufu & Oreos, her one-woman show about a multicultural 20-something navigating several worlds, which she starred in at the BCA last month. Janice has also had roles with Company One, Zeitgeist Stage Company and Whistler in the Dark, among other local companies, and you can catch her flexing her comedic chops on Thursday Nights at ImprovBoston.

ACTOR

ALEX POLLOCK

You might not know him yet, but we have a hunch you'll be hearing big things about Alex Pollock very soon. The versatile young actor took home the Norton Award for Outstanding Actor for Small or Fringe Theater for his turns in three excellent productions this year—Gloucester Stage Company's This Is Our Youth, Company One's The Flick, and Boston Playwrights' Theatre's Windowmen. In the last, a play based on local actor-turned-playwright Steven Barkhimer's experiences working at Fulton Fish Market, Pollock shone in a talented all-male ensemble as a new employee forced to fit in fast.

TIGERMAN WOAH!

This burly, bearded band of free-wheelin' Americana rockers—who never met a party they didn't like or a stage they couldn't own—have been popping up everywhere during the past six months or so, from SXSW (where they made friends with Dave Grohl) to a formidable run in this year's Rock 'n' Roll Rumble to an opening slot at May's Boston Calling. Plus, the Georgia-born, North Shore-bred Tiger men proved that, along with knowing their way around a mean banjo breakdown, they're cool dudes: After Boston Calling, they joined other local bands for Boston Clawing, a free show devised to keep the music playing for those who didn't score tix to the festival.

CLASSICAL EVENT

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA'S SALOME

As the closing notes of Salome echoed throughout Symphony Hall in March, the audience rose to its feet in a roaring standing ovation. If you've ever been to the symphony, you know that means something—this can be a bit of a reserved crowd. Undeniably one of the most exciting musical events of the year, the one-night-only production of Strauss' interpretation of Oscar Wilde's take on the biblical tale marked BSO music director designate Andris Nelsons' first time conducting opera at Symphony Hall—and only left us more excited for his debut season, which kicks off in September.

COMEDY CLUB

IMPROV ASYLUM

Tucked away amid the hustle and bustle of Hanover Street, Improv Asylum is easy to overlook. Despite that, the little basement-level comedy club (whose owners opened Laugh Boston in the Seaport last year) consistently sells out its rowdy Friday and Saturday night shows. That's because of the quality of the improvisers, who are always at the top of their game. Stick around after a Saturday night show for the free (for ticket holders) midnight set, when performers drink onstage and get a little loose. Bonus: On Tuesday nights the "House Teams" (talented improvisers-in-training) perform for just five bucks, so you can spend the cash you save on an extra bucket of ice-cold beer.

DANCE EVENT

BOSTON BALLET'S "NIGHT OF STARS"

A kickoff to the acclaimed company's 50th season, Boston Ballet's first free outdoor installment of its annual "Night of Stars" event drew an estimated 55,000 people to the largest stage ever built on Boston Common. Dancers culled from around the world performed in a diverse program that included Balanchine's Serenade and Symphony in Three Movements and Christopher Bruce's Rolling Stones-set Rooster. If its reception was any evidence, this unique night will soon be reprised.

EXHIBIT

SHE WHO TELLS A STORY: WOMEN PHOTOGRAPHERS FROM IRAN AND THE ARAB WORLD AT THE MFA

Challenging Western stereotypes of Middle Eastern women, this Kristen Gresh-curated exhibit spotlighted approximately 100 photos and two videos by a dozen artists. Some highlights: Lalla Assia Essaydi's stunning triptych Bullet Revisited #3 riffed on 19th-century Orientalist tropes with an odalisque whose ornate gold and silver surroundings are revealed to be bullet casings. And Rania Matar's portrait series A Girl and Her Room peered into the bedrooms of teenage girls, finding common ground despite stark differences in class and circumstance. Missed the show? Take heart: The MFA's acquired 18 works.

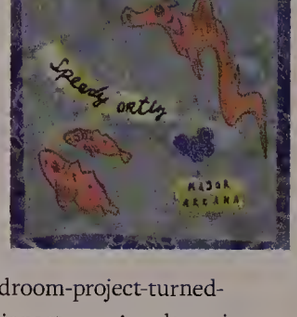
SAMSØN



Samsøn Projects turned 10 this year, but its South End art space still operates like a boundary-busting upstart. ALBUM

Major Arcana by Speedy Ortiz

Northampton-based Sadie Dupuis' bedroom-project-turned-band has been up to some big things this past year. An edgy noise-pop quartet dealing in moody musings— buoyed by fuzzed-out guitars and Dupuis' oft-changing vocals—Speedy Ortiz won New Artist of the Year at the Boston Music Awards and released this killer debut, called out in Pitchfork's Best New Music roundup. Now they can add this award to their list of accomplishments, because we can't stop spinning it.

BOSTON CALLING

A major outdoor music festival in Boston's city center? When people first caught wind of May 2013's inaugural Boston Calling, reactions ranged from majorly psyched to cautiously skeptical. A fest of this nature is usually held in a rolling field somewhere bucolic and, you know, fest-y—not in a concrete office-plex like Government Center. However, Boston Calling went off with nary a hitch, and has since evolved into a biannual three-day-party drawing thousands of people and some seriously major national talent—The National, fun. and Passion Pit, to name a few—to City Hall Plaza. Who needs Coachella when you can a hop the T to a huge-ass music fest in your own backyard?

JAZZ CLUB

SCULLERS

Allston Rock City also happens to be home to excellent jazz. Celebrating its 25th anniversary this year, Scullers has hosted big names like Arturo Sandoval, Wynton Marsalis and Norah Jones. But discerning jazz aficionados know it's also a great place to catch both rising stars and seasoned vets—from soloists to swinging big bands—in intimate digs where you can sup, sip and drink in views of the Charles.

KARAOKE

COURTSIDE

Courtside Karaoke happens every Thursday, Friday and Saturday in the sprawling back room of a dingy dive where wizened drinkers hold court at the bar. This is karaoke as it was meant to be sung. The master of ceremonies takes his job seriously, making sure that no show-boater hogs more than his fair share of the mic, and affably brusque waitresses serve up pitchers of cheap beer and cheaper bar snacks to long folding tables of singers and attentive listeners. In short: perfection.

SHAWN BRACKBILL

BRIGHTON MUSIC HALL

If you want proximity to a band about to blow up, catch a show at Brighton Music Hall. The rock club—which filled the gap left in Allston when Harpers Ferry closed—serves as a pivotal jumping-off point for both local and nationally touring bands on the rise. Artists who've graduated from small-scale clubs like T.T.'s and Great Scott stop by Brighton Music Hall (which offers that same feeling of intimacy with more space) before launching to grander venues—think past acts as varied as Canadian garage-rockers Japandroids, Berklee-trained songstress Betty Who, and indie-folk outfit Typhoon. Plus, the club occasionally books massive touring acts that drop in for an afterparty (notably, a midnight bash with Diplo).

Elizabeth Alexander

Creating lush yet delicate sculptures, installations and collages from found objects and meticulously cut paper, Elizabeth Alexander has shown her work everywhere from the Gardner Museum to France's Pont-Aven Contemporary Gallery to South Korea's Gallery Al. But we were particularly taken by the MassArt alum's recent shows at Boston Sculptors Gallery and Newton's New Art Center, featuring wonders made from deconstructed wallpaper and hand-cut porcelain chinaware befitting a mad hatter's tea party.

MOST ANTICIPATED
KINKY BOOTS

Turning a movie into a musical can be tricky. While there have certainly been success stories, from Billy Elliot to The Lion King to The Producers, in recent years we've seen more misses than hits. (We're looking at you, Spider Man: Turn Off the Dark.) Happily, Kinky Boots falls squarely in the former category. In fact, thanks to Cyndi Lauper's killer score, it actually improves upon the original tale of a down-on-his-luck factory owner who saves his shoe business with help from a savvy drag queen. The show took home six Tonys in 2013, including Best Musical, so we're sure it'll make a smashing finale to Broadway in Boston's upcoming season. Get your tickets early, folks; this one should sell out.

NONFICTION BOOK BY A LOCAL AUTHOR
BOOK OF AGES: THE LIFE AND OPINIONS OF JANE FRANKLIN BY JILL LEPORE

Harvard professor and New Yorker staff writer Jill Lepore adds another item to her impressive resume with her groundbreaking portrait of Benjamin Franklin's youngest sister, a mother of 12 who lived in the shadow of her celebrated brother. Through little-studied letters, documents and portraits, Lepore paints a lively picture of the "other" Franklin, revealing her to be as interesting a subject as her famed sibling—who wrote more letters to her than he did to any other person, but who didn't mention her once in his memoirs.

NOVEL BY A LOCAL AUTHOR
THE WEIRDNESS BY JEREMY P. BUSHNELL

Northeastern professor Jeremy P. Bushnell's debut novel is a quirky, wildly entertaining commentary on the state of the struggling young writer, and to accomplish it he didn't even need a leg-up from any dark forces (that we know of). The Weirdness follows a downtrodden would-be fiction writer who awakes one morning in his Brooklyn apartment with a nasty hangover and a nastier visitor: the devil himself. Lucifer is ready to grant him a big book deal in exchange for a little favor. No success comes without cost, however, and Bushnell's witty debut is a fine, slightly meta exploration of that bargain.

ROCK CLUB

THE SINCLAIR

The Sinclair has been open for a little more than a year, but it took less time than that to establish itself as the best thing going in this town's music scene. We have our fair share of venerable rock clubs, but the Harvard Square powerhouse is the only one where you can catch an awesome show, have a good meal and grab an expertly crafted drink all in one place. The fact that you can saddle up to an attractive bar with an estimable cocktail program between sets is just an added bonus when you consider that the Sinclair has its booking on lock, consistently billing great artists that span genres.

THEATER COMPANY

SPEAKEASY STAGE COMPANY

If one were to visit Boston's official Theater District—and stop there—one might think big-ticket, nationally touring productions like The Lion King are all we've got. And yes, we have those (and love them). But our theater scene is as rich and varied as our city, with local companies like SpeakEasy quietly producing some truly outstanding work every year. Case in point: SpeakEasy founder and producing artistic director Paul Daigneault scored a well-deserved Norton Award for Sustained Excellence this year—excellence demonstrated by productions like this past season's New England premiere stagings of Tribes (which took home a few awards of its own) and The Whale.

RECORD LABEL

Run for Cover Records

In case you haven't heard, there's an emo revival (well, another one) happening as we speak, and Boston-based label Run for Cover is at its forefront. No longer the whiny domain of angsty teens with black eyeliner and way too many feelings, emo is being reinvented by a new generation of hungry young bands. Run for Cover founder Jeff Casazza has an ear for the genre, and he's helped some talented outfits—Tigers Jaw, Modern Baseball and Seahaven, to name just a few standouts—put out some excellent recent albums. Get educated: Emo isn't dead; it never was.

THEATER PRODUCTION

A.R.T.'S ALL THE WAY

A three-hour play about Lyndon B. Johnson's presidency does not sound like a premise for a rousing theater experience. But oh, how wrong you'd have been to miss American Repertory Theater's remarkable production, starring Breaking Bad's Bryan Cranston as LBJ, wheeling and dealing to get the 1964 Civil Rights Act passed. Cranston's formidable star power and layered portrait of the former president would have been enough to make this a winning production. However, the entire cast and crew rose to the occasion, breathing life and intrigue into dense material and taking it, well, all the way to the top—and to Broadway, and two Tony Awards, after a sold-out run in Cambridge.

DJ

Frank White

A longtime fixture on Boston's nightlife circuit, White is the kind of DJ who moves effortlessly among scenes and genres. Name a club in this town and he's likely helmed its tables, with residencies at venues including Middlesex, Good Life, Alibi and North Star, to name just a few. Recently, White has been earning big props for his skills, scoring an opening set at last September's Boston Calling and nabbing the award for DJ Artist of the Year at 2013's Boston Music Awards.

ANTICLIMACTIC ENDING
BOSTON BRUINS

The Bruins couldn't have looked better during the regular season, earning the NHL President's Trophy as the best team in the league after reaching the Stanley Cup Final last year. But it all fell apart against the Canadiens in the second round of the playoffs, a slow-motion train wreck that took seven games to unfold. If there's an upside, it's that the team's performance during the past few years indicates that the Bruins might be turning into the Patriots of hockey—a team that can lose a star now and then (most recently, Tyler Seguin) and remain a club to be reckoned with season after season. In the case of the Bruins, at least we can say, "Maybe next year," and really believe it.

EPIC SPORTS DAY
SUNDAY, OCT. 13, 2013

It was one of those great fall days when both the Sox and Pats were playing—and both made stunning comebacks to win. First, the Patriots had a miraculous last-second comeback against the Saints. Then hours later, the Red Sox rallied from a 5-0 hole when David Ortiz hit a grand slam, followed by a Jarrod Saltalamacchia walk-off single in the bottom of the ninth inning, and beat the Tigers in Game 2 of the ALCS. Maybe it wasn't the most glorious Boston sports day of the year—that would have to be Oct. 30, when the Red Sox won the World Series—but the 13th was one of those days that remind New England fans that this is still Titletown.

MALE ATHLETE
Meb Keflezighi

Could there have been a better year for the Boston Marathon winner to hail from America? Keflezighi, who was born in Eritrea and became a U.S. citizen in 1998, has suffered injuries that sometimes looked career-ending, leading Nike to drop his sponsorship in 2011. Bet they're sorry now! "I've been thinking about the Boston bombing for 365 days," Keflezighi said after the race, adding that the writing on the street and the wildly cheering crowds helped provide that extra bit of motivation to get him to 2:08:37, his personal best. In a statement that was both earnest and entirely devoid of ego, Keflezighi summed it all up when he said: "Boston deserved this."

FEMALE ATHLETE
MEGHAN DUGGAN

After winning a silver medal in the 2010 Olympics, Danvers' Meghan Duggan became captain of the 2014 U.S. women's hockey team. In Sochi, they came tantalizingly close to gold, but lost 3-2 to Canada despite Duggan's second-period goal. Silver is still a stellar showing, and it was enough to earn Duggan and her teammates a little victory lap in the form of a ceremonial pitch at Fenway Park in April. That happened the day after Yankees pitcher Michael Pineda was ejected for using pine tar, and Duggan is now surely the first Olympic athlete to wipe a baseball with imaginary pine tar before a first pitch. Take that, Yankees. South Korea 2018, here we come.

LOCAL ATHLETE
SHABAZZ NAPIER

Roxbury native and former Lawrence Academy and Charlestown High School star Shabazz Napier looks destined for good things in the NBA after leading the UConn men's basketball team to an NCAA championship. The senior point guard was the high scorer of the title game, notching 22 points, six rebounds, three assists and three steals—pretty much the exact numbers he averaged during the six games of the tournament. Napier also earned attention off the court for critiquing the NCAA's treatment of its players, which prompted the Connecticut legislature to look into allowing athlete unionization. Too bad the Celtics are set at point guard, but Napier is thrilled about landing on the Miami Heat, the Eastern Conference champs for the past four years.

MASTER OF SOCIAL MEDIA
XANDER BOGAERTS

Red Sox shortstop Bogaerts waited until April to issue his first tweet of the year, and it certainly was memorable. Bogaerts apparently sent a private message publicly, providing a bit of insight into the social life of a Red Sox rookie. The tweet in question was a photo sent by an, uh, adoring fan. It was relatively innocent, but Bogaerts nonetheless deleted his account immediately. The whole incident was both a cautionary tale and another reminder that we wish Twitter had been around while Wade Boggs was playing.

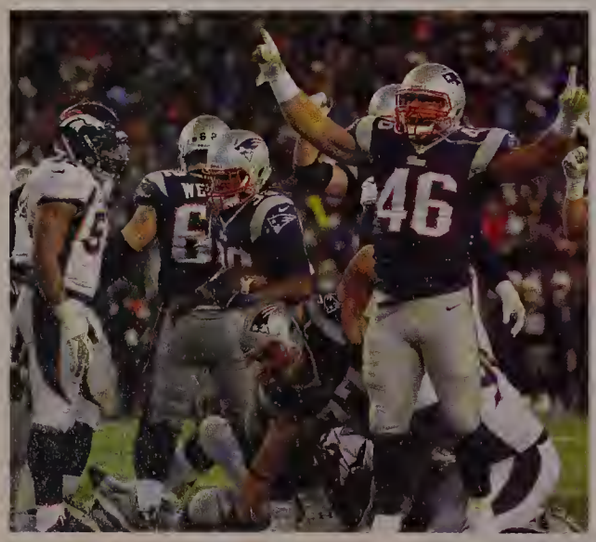
ONE-YEAR WONDER
JAROME IGINLA

Bruins fans probably didn't expect much from 36-year-old Calgary stalwart Jarome Iginla, who spurned a trade to Boston during the 2012-13 season and subsequently found himself on the wrong side of the contest when the Bruins swept the Penguins in the 2013 conference finals. Iginla didn't make the same mistake twice, signing a one-year deal with the Bruins and promptly assuming a role as one of the team's biggest offensive threats, tallying 61 points. Last year, Iginla racked up eight game-winning goals in the regular season, tying for fourth in the NHL. Iginla's time with Boston was short-lived (he signed with Colorado for the 2014-15 season), but what a year it was.

PROFESSOR OF PUNCHES
PEGGY MORGAN

Peggy Morgan might be the only cage fighter to use words like "fantods" in her tweets. Nicknamed "the Daywalker," the 6-foot-1-inch Morgan is an adjunct professor of English literature and composition at Southern New Hampshire University—that is, when she's not bringing the pain. Last year Morgan was a cast member on season 18 of The Ultimate Fighter, competing in the championship in Las Vegas in November. Also, her dad is a podiatrist who drives an ambulance he calls "The Toe Truck." You really might need to follow her on Twitter. And if you're an SNHU student, don't be late with those papers unless you want to find out what it's like to get on the wrong side of the Daywalker.

PROJECT
THE CELTICS



Last year's Celtics sort of reminded us of the Antoine Walker-era teams—good enough to sometimes allow you to think they have a chance, but not good enough to beat a real team in a seven-game series. With a lineup like that, you either limp into the playoffs as an eight-seed or you blow it up while you still can, and we learned Danny Ainge's intentions when Jordan Crawford and Courtney Lee were traded in January. Even when Rajon Rondo returned, the Celts went 11-31, partially because he got hurt again and they no longer had Crawford as backup. But the logic is pretty clear—even under the best of circumstances, the 2013-14 Celtics were a borderline playoff team. So let's clean house and try again next year. Hey, it worked for the Sox.

REASONS FOR OPTIMISM
DARRELLE REVIS, BRANDON LAFELL AND BRANDON BROWNER

During the offseason, the Pats lost Aqib Talib but gained Revis Island, who racked up 50 tackles for the Bucs last year. Browner is a recent Pro Bowler who was poached from Seattle's Super Bowl-winning defense. And LaFell's 2013 production would've made him the third-best receiver on the Patriots—impressive, given that his quarterback threw 1,000 fewer yards than Tom Brady. With the defense restocked, a new target for Brady and the re-signing of their own crucial free agent, Julian Edelman, we're already looking forward to September.

TURNAROUND
THE 2013 RED SOX

They didn't just go from worst to first. Between 2012 and 2013, the Red Sox went from historically wretched to World Series champs, defying even the loftiest expectations. What seemed like a rebuilding ballclub jelled into the best team in baseball, with happy surprises like Koji Uehara jump-starting the carry-over core that remained after the Great Dodgers Purge. What transpired in the year that followed October 2012 was like a slow-motion re-enactment of the 2004 ALCS—against all odds, the Sox went from hopeless losers to crushing St. Louis' dreams. It's nice to know that even now, after all that's happened in the past decade, the Red Sox still have the power to surprise us.

REGULAR-SEASON COMEBACK
Patriots 34, Broncos 31

Putting up 344 yards and three touchdowns is a nice game for any quarterback. To do it all in the second half, against one of the best teams in the league, is the performance of a lifetime. Last November, the Patriots went into halftime down 24-0, with a smug and smiley Peyton Manning looking like he might ponder throwing left-handed just for the sport of it. But when the clock ran out in overtime, the Patriots were ahead 34-31, pulling off the biggest comeback of Tom Brady's career. The glorious night was capped by seeing Wes Welker botch a punt catch in his return to Foxborough. Now if we could just forget about the next time they met.

MVP

David Ortiz

"Act like you've been there before," goes the saying. In the case of David Ortiz and the World Series, he's now been there three times, and last year's performance highlights his ease in baseball's brightest spotlight. During the course of the Series, Ortiz reached base 19 times in 25 plate appearances, second in World Series history behind steroid-era Barry Bonds. He also batted .688, a performance that was bested only by Billy Hatcher, of all people, in 1990. Besides his outsized presence at the plate, Ortiz served as an oracle, a calming presence for the guys who'd never actually been there before—which was most of them. Ortiz is known for going on streaks, and last year, at age 37, he pulled off one for the history books.

Best Revitalized Neighborhood // pg. 114

SLEEPWALKER

You might not know the name Tony Matelli, but you probably know of his most famous piece of work, Sleepwalker. Or, as Wellesley College students called it last winter, "The Creepy Guy in His Underwear Out in the Snow." It's safe to say that in the past year, no local artwork—not even the $500 million worth of works stolen from the Gardner Museum that the FBI have been trying to find for more than two decades—has gotten more attention. A vandal doused the sculpture with yellow paint in May, turning what was once just a scene into a crime scene.

DO-GOODERS
MARATHON FUNDRAISERS

The Marathon bombers surely imagined that their attack would sow fear and division among the populace. In fact, the bombing had the opposite effect, uniting the city and runners more strongly than ever. Nowhere was that more evident than the Marathon fundraising for this year, which stands at more than $38 million. At least six groups raised more than a million dollars—Team MR8, which ran for Martin Richard, raised $1.2 million, and Boston Children's Hospital raised $2.5 million. The shock has worn off, but Boston Strong still makes us proud.

ENDANGERED SPECIES
THE KEYTAR BEAR

As far as we can tell, there's only one Keytar Bear left in the wild. So stop antagonizing him, because everyone knows that Keytar Bears don't respond well to stress. When threatened, they retreat to their caves and play nothing but Tesla ballads until they feel it's safe to venture back to the sidewalk or T platform. Of course, some scientists have hypothesized that the Keytar Bear is nothing more than a guy wearing a bear costume, but that, like gravity, is only a theory. Although—just putting it out there—we have noticed that the Keytar Bear and Rajon Rondo are never in the same place at the same time. Coincidence?

DOPPELGÄNGER
Tupac at the Celtics Game

The most interesting thing about the March 5 Celtics vs. Warriors game definitely didn't have anything to do with the Celtics or the Warriors. In the third quarter, the crowd started chanting "Let's go Tupac!" in reference to a guy in the stands who looked more like Tupac than the Tupac hologram. Of course, the Shakur stand-in obviously went for that look on purpose, rocking a bandana and white jacket to let everyone at TD Garden know who had the juice. The crowd was so delighted that maybe the Celtics should consider hiring celebrity impersonators on a regular basis. Hey, are the Celtics losing? Who cares—is that Philip Seymour Hoffman?

HEADLINE
JOHN HENRY BUYS THE GLOBE

Why did Red Sox owner and stone-cold billionaire John Henry buy The Boston Globe? He laid out the reasons in an editorial titled, succinctly enough, "Why I bought The Globe." Among other encouraging sentiments, Henry wrote, "I grew to believe that New England is a better place with a healthy, vibrant Globe." Hey, if he can help turn around the Red Sox, then there's hope yet for The Globe. With Henry at the helm, the Inside Track can look forward to plenty more years of Boring Broadsheet disses.

MOMENT YOU WISH YOU'D SEEN
CHARLIZE THERON GEEKING OUT OVER KRISTEN KISH

Scene: Stephanie Cmar (competitor, Top Chef seasons 10 and 11) was hard at work at No. 9 Park, and Kristen

Kish (Top Chef winner, season 10) was having a casual dinner alone on a well-deserved night off. Then, in walks none other than Charlize Theron (guest judge, Top Chef season 9), who subsequently recognizes Kish and experiences what might be described as a fangirl reaction. A moment later, two of the most beautiful women in the world stand in the middle of the restaurant fawning over each other. Bravo for helping make that happen, Bravo.

REVITALIZED NEIGHBORHOOD

FORT POINT

Fort Point used to mean Lucky's, the Children's Museum and Congress Street traffic howling past the barren wasteland between the Financial District and Southie. Now it's a destination unto itself, colonized by bars and restaurants like Menton, Drink, Row 34 and Pastoral, not to mention craft brewery Trillium. But those brick warehouses still house artists' studios, and Fort Point remains the kind of place where one of those artists can festoon the channel with an armada of floating palms. While the nearby Seaport goes big with hotels and massive restaurants, adjacent Fort Point manages to retain the identity, and the quirk, that made it cool in the first place.

SAD CLOSING

UPSTAIRS ON THE SQUARE

If you rang in the New Year at UpStairs on the Square, wrapping up dinner with a crème fraîche tangerine creamsicle, then you literally got the last taste of a legendary Cambridge dining institution.

REASON TO WAIT IN LINE

New Grocery Stores!

Make way, people of Market Basket, because new grocery stores are invading Boston with their gridlock-causing brand of revolutionary food presentation. The latest arrivals are Wegman's in Chestnut Hill and H-Mart in Central Square, both of which debuted with fresh breads, live lobsters and mammoth lines of shoppers hungry for something new. In the case of Wegman's, the DOT posted electronic signs on Route 9 warning motorists of impending traffic, in the manner of a major concert, sporting event or papal visit. "Yes, but do you have a liquor store right next door?" asked the Shaw's at the JFK T stop.

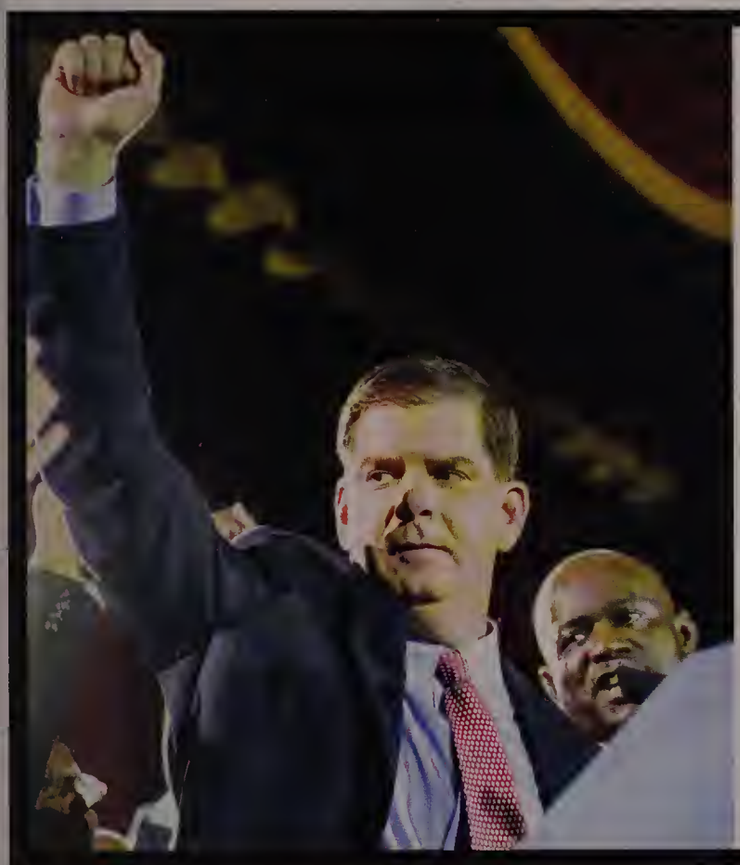
Owners Mary-Catherine Deibel and Deborah Hughes founded it as UpStairs at the Pudding in 1982, presiding over two floors that were each unlike anything else in the city. As the venue for the Hasty Pudding awards dinner, UpStairs saw celebs like Tom Cruise and Julia Roberts, in addition to a regular slate of pols, power brokers and run-of-the-mill Harvard future-gazillionaires. Its zany pink personality coupled with no-excuses fine dining in a manner that fit perfectly with the often-conflicted zeitgeist of Harvard Square itself, where casual bohemianism collides with high expectations.

SIGN THAT THIS WINTER WAS THE WORST EVER

CHELSEA CLOSING A ROAD BECAUSE OF A GIANT ICICLE

Kids, gather 'round and let Grandpap tell you about the winter of 2013-14, when it snowed for 90 straight days, city residents commuted on dogsleds and all of Cambridge was taken over by yetis. OK, none of that happened. But there was an icicle so big that they had to close a road in Chelsea after a six-foot-long frozen dagger fell off a house and smashed a car window in February. It was all par for the course this past winter: freezing cold, whiteout blizzards and, oh yes, the occasional threat of icy death from above.

STYLE ICON



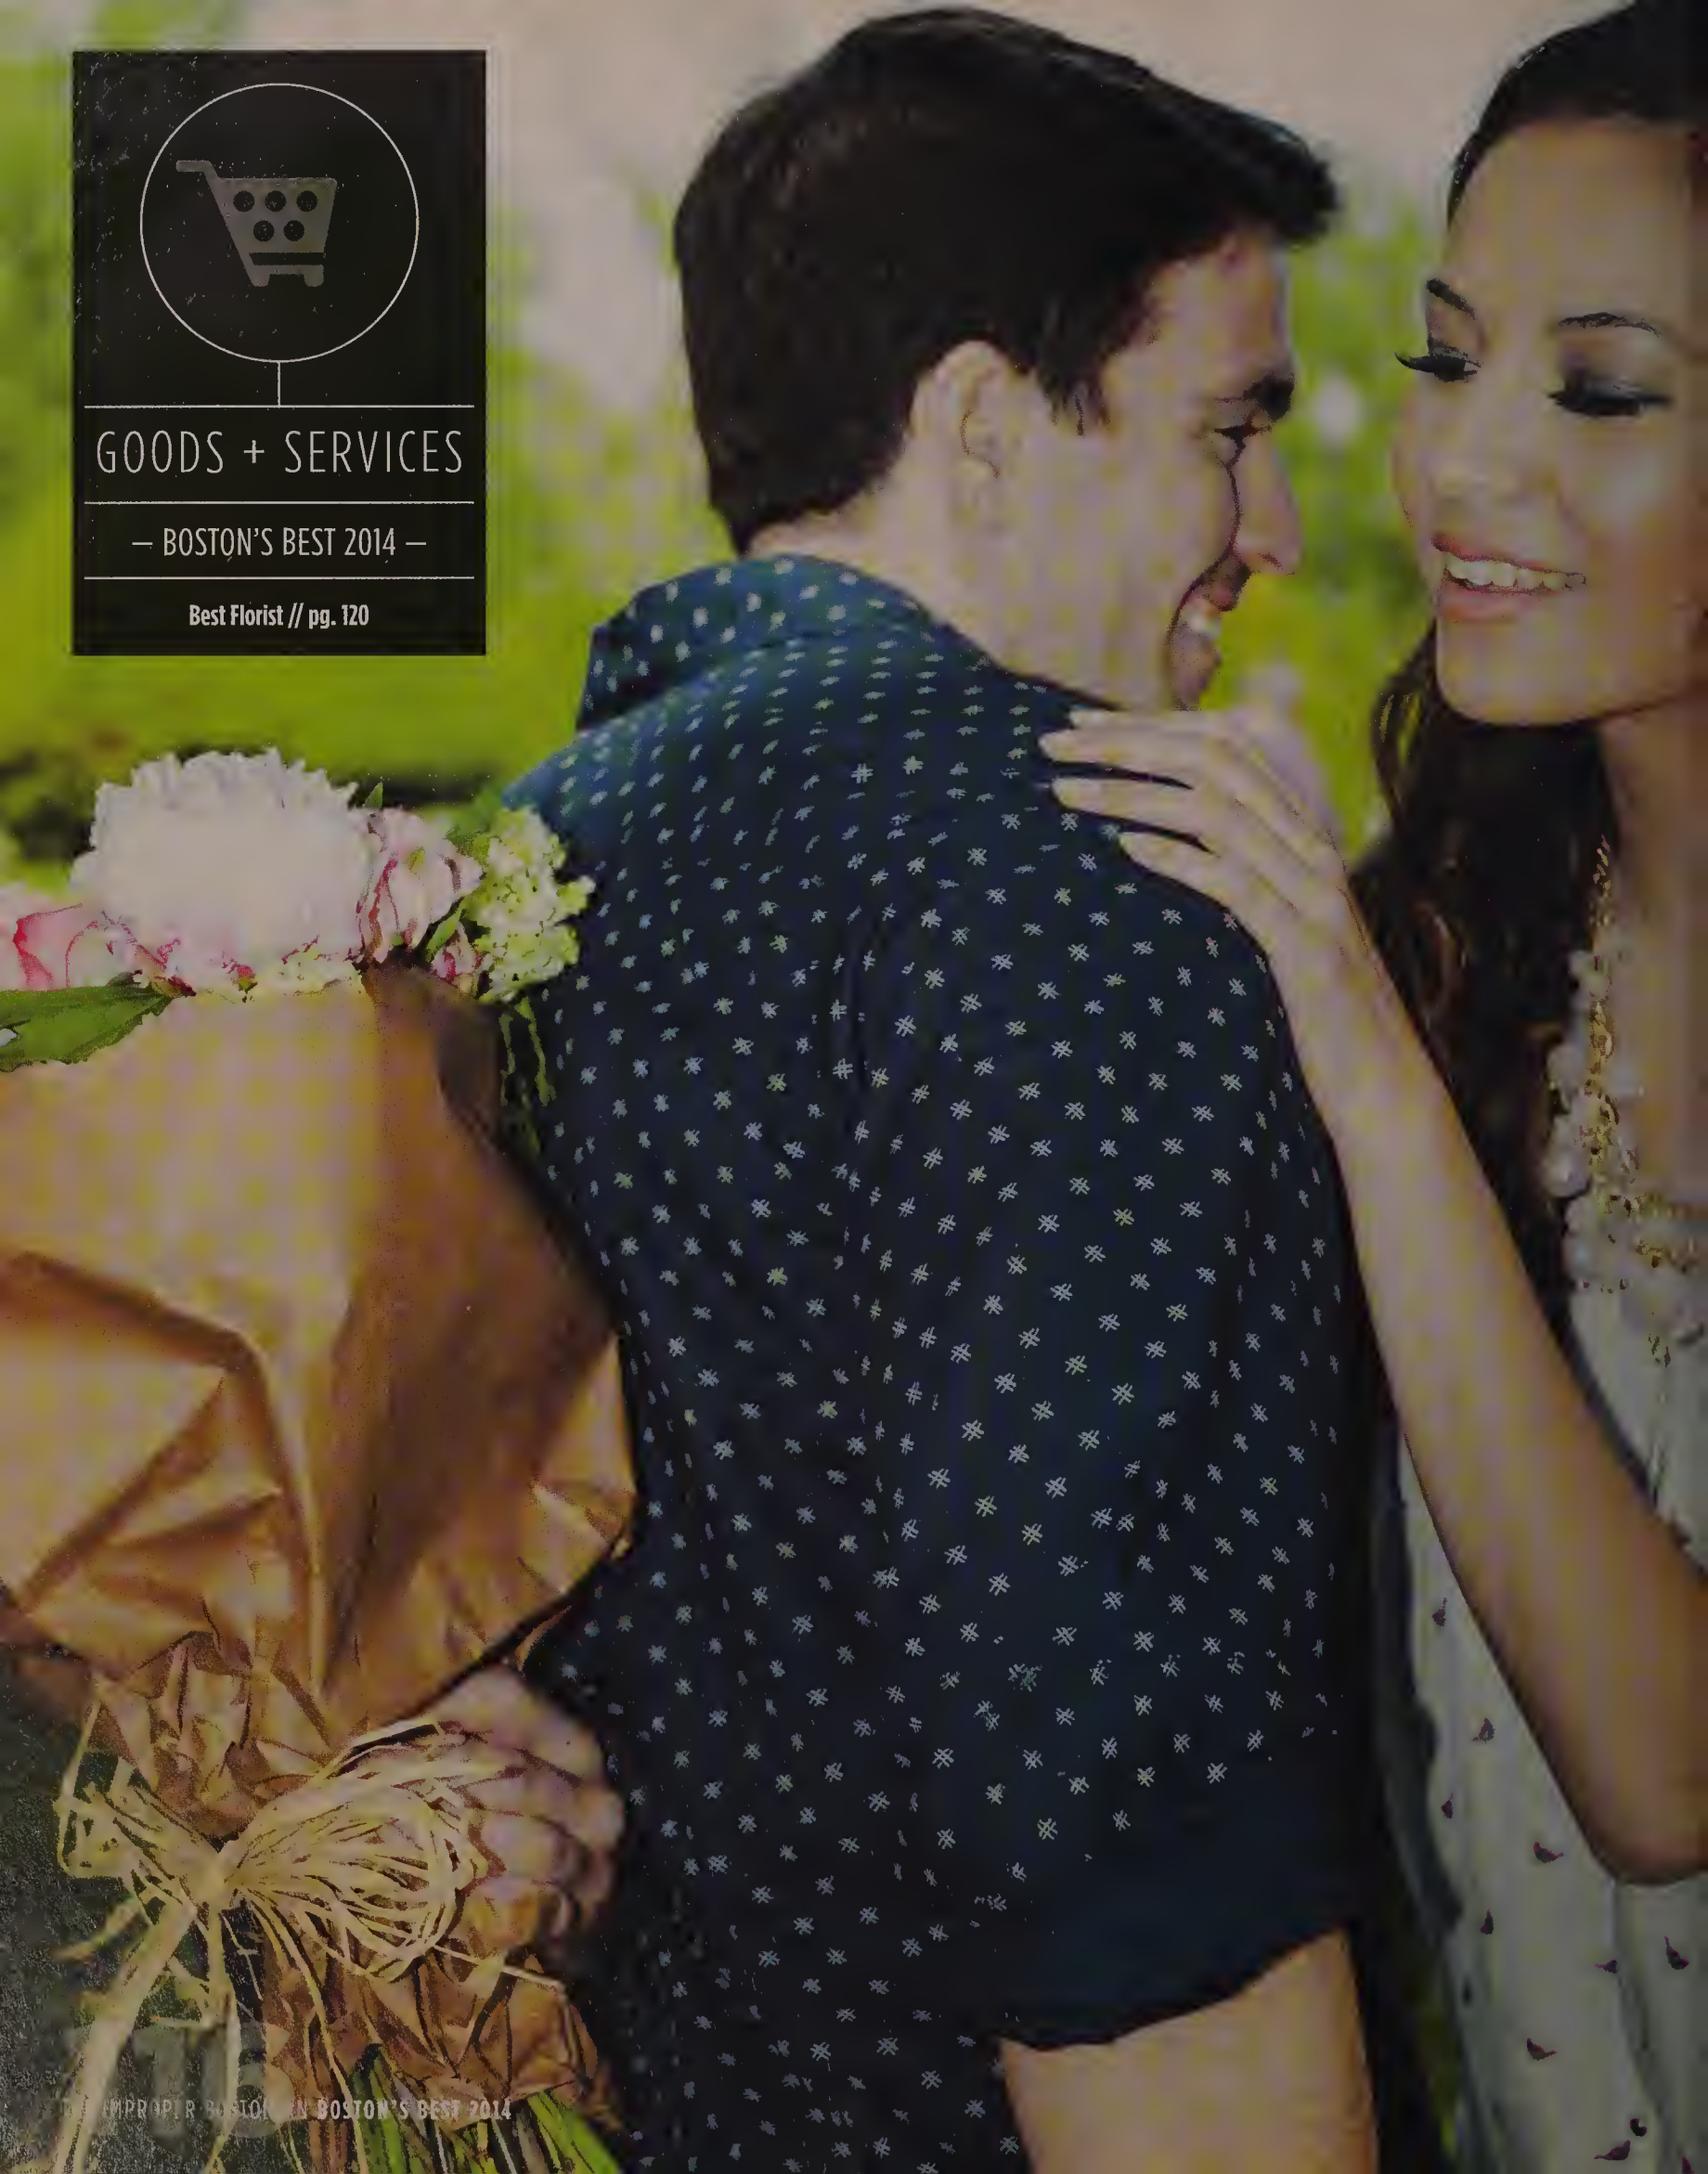
MARILYN RISEMAN

To call her a fixture of Boston society doesn't really begin to convey the depth of Marilyn Riseman's roots in this city and the esteem in which she was held. Riseman opened her first boutique on Newbury Street in 1966, devoting herself to the challenging project of expanding Bostonians' fashion sensibilities. She set an avant-garde example, embracing an unmistakable Kabuki look that exuberantly announced her presence at any party. Riseman was a bona fide character, a fashion pioneer, a free thinker and a mentor to many. Boston is a little less interesting without her.

TOUGH ACT TO FOLLOW

MAYOR MENINO

Marty Walsh has his work cut out for him. Not because Boston is a hard city to run—though it surely is—but because his predecessor was none other than Thomas Michael Menino, the 53rd mayor of Boston and one of its most powerful. At the city's helm for more than 20 years, Menino ruled with an iron fist when he had to, but also knew when to defer to Boston's unique peculiarities, like Southie's habit of coning parking spaces. Not all of his big ideas came to pass (for example, a 1,000-foot tower on the site of the Winthrop garage), but enough have transpired to leave Boston a better city than it was when he took over in 1993. And isn't that all you can ask of a mayor?



EXCUSE TO PARTY ALL NIGHT

The T Extending Its Hours

If New York is the City That Never Sleeps, Boston was always the City That Passed Out Early and Woke Up With Vulgar Sharpie Drawings on Its Face. But that's changing now that the T is running till 3 am on weekends and Mayor Marty Walsh has proposed pushing last call from 1:30 to 2:30 am. Granted, the T's new schedule isn't yet permanent, and Walsh hasn't gotten his way on last call, but it's nice to see local government recognize that not all wee-hours drinks have to be furtively sipped back at Sully's apartment because the Sevens booted you an hour ago. Chinatown's cold-tea industry might take a hit, but that's the price of progress.

Magic Beans

This indie shop turned 10 this year, and my how it's grown. Founded by Eli and Sheri Gurock when she was expecting their second child, Magic Beans' Brookline flagship has expanded into a fleet of six stores, each of which stocks stimulating toys, sturdy and stylish nursery furniture, baby-shower-ready gift baskets and a wide selection of thoughtfully designed gear, from easily adjustable carriers and strollers to swiveling bassinets that are a boon for nighttime feedings. Plus, each store has a Playscape lounge to help keep young patrons—and their parents—happy.

CHILDREN'S CLOTHING

MULBERRY ROAD

Why should the Beckham brood have all the fashion fun? Put David and Posh's kids to shame with a trip down Mulberry Road. There are bubble rompers for your little lady and sports apparel for your future all-star. They even give gloomy days a silver lining with cute rain gear and galoshes. Get ready, paparazzi. Here come some cute kids.

COSTUME JEWELRY

PORTOBELLO ROAD

Recently relocated to The Street, Portobello Road channels the famous London street market with global wares. There are tons of chunky semi-precious- and precious-stone necklaces, lightweight statement earrings, a large collection of wrap bracelets and bangles from designers such as Chan Luu, Renee Sheppard and Adel Chefridi. Prices range from $25 to $2,000, so there's something sparkly for every budget.

CONSIGNMENT STORE

Covet

Thou shalt not covet? One step inside this small but well-stocked Southie shop and you'll be tempted to sin a little. Owner Hanadi Hamzeh curates serious finds and prices them at 20 to 30 percent below retail. You'll spot 3.1 Phillip Lim and Marc Jacobs alongside everyday labels like Kimchi Blue and Ann Taylor. A display table showcases baubles and bags, and the shoe wall is a must-hit. (We've glimpsed red soles.)

FINE JEWELRY

JOSEPH GANN JEWELERS

Established in 1933, Joseph Gann Jewelers has sold fine jewelry for three generations. These folks know their bling, and they're happy to guide you through cases that shine with diamond engagement rings, pendants, tennis bracelets, wedding bands, pearl earrings and more. Most are newly designed, but some estate pieces come with histories. They also offer classic timepieces from Bulova and Chelsea, as well as crystal, dinnerware and sterling.

HANDBAGS

SAKS FIFTH AVENUE

Sometimes all you need is lipstick, your iPhone and cash. Then there are times when your purse is so full it rivals Mary Poppins' bag. From super-small to carry-it-all, you'll likely find whatever you need in Saks' handbag department. Boasting designer labels such as Alexander McQueen, Marc Jacobs, Kate Spade and Prada, it proffers glitzy clutches, casual crossbodies, slouchy hobos, trim backpacks and huge beach totes to carry you through any occasion.

JEANS

Packed with up to 30 brands, including Citizens of Humanity, Joe's, J Brand and Hudson, this North End boutique tucked away near the water is where you'll find the perfect pair. Owner Alison Barnard and her team take the sting out of trying on jeans, as they understand each label's fit and can grab the right style for your body type. Hop in one of their cabana-style dressing rooms already!

INTIMATE APPAREL

FORTY WINKS

Dressing well is about more than meets the eye. The experts at this Harvard Square shop fill lingerie drawers with stylish bras, undies and sleepwear—even swimsuits—for women of all sizes, from 30A to 40H. You'll find Bordelle, Simone Perele and Eberjey in dainty demis, comfy everyday styles and luxury loungewear. And of course, there are sexy garters, silky hosiery and slinky chemises for those times when going to bed doesn't involve sleep. Wink, wink.

LOCAL DESIGNER, CLOTHING

TATIANA TEJEDOR

This Colombian native is all over the place, but in a good way. An emerging designer with a background in architecture, interior design and fine art, she also holds a degree from the School of Fashion Design. We love her modern, edgy work in silk, linen canvas and cotton, worn by "art lovers and risk takers." Although she divides her time between Boston and Spain, you won't have to go too far for her styles: Tejedor will soon be selling at her men's shop, Caramelo Clothing Co.

Proudly family-owned and operated since the 1800s, Louis boasts a legendary men's selection. You'll leave its modern Fan Pier showplace looking as stylish as a Sartorialist shot, dressed in trousers, shirts, shoes and sweaters from Finamore, Harry's of London and Valentini. Tip: Sift through your posh purchases upstairs at Sam's restaurant. Its wraparound deck boasts priceless harbor views.

SAULT NEW ENGLAND

When you see an old-timey bicycle (complete with basket) parked on the sidewalk, you'll know you're in the right place. Inside, fellas fill their wardrobes with boat shoes, board shorts, button-downs and bow ties. LOCAL DESIGNER, ACCESSORIES

Artemis Design Co.

Artemis was the Greek goddess of the hunt, and Artemis Design Co. founder Milicent Armstrong is herself an impressive huntress, scouring the world for antique textiles. Turkish kilim rugs, ikat silks and velvets from Uzbekistan are fashioned into eye-catching bags and shoes. (Her colorful flats with braided trim are this summer's answer to boring espadrilles.) Armstrong hopes to expand into Indian silks, African waxed cotton and Peruvian and Moroccan textiles. We say, go for it.

MEN'S SHOES

CLARKS

Founded in 1825, this British brand (with an American headquarters in Newton) has won many fans over the years, from mods to rappers to Walter White. Known for its original 1949 Desert Boot, a cult classic inspired by crepe soles worn by British officers in World War II, Clarks also delivers summer style with leather boat shoes and canvas slip-ons. And Elvis fans, heads up: There's even a blue suede wing-tip for you. Be sure to check out the brand's new outlet in Somerville's Assembly Row.

SHOPPING DESTINATION

CHESTNUT HILL

An old dog got some new tricks. The region's oldest suburban shopping center, Chestnut Hill Shopping Center, is now The Street, a village-like streetscape that said bye-bye to ugly Route 9 with tree-shaded pedestrian walkways, Hammond Pond views and outdoor cafes. Highlights of the now 406,000-square-foot shopping destination include fashion favorites such as Intermix, Ku De Ta and, coming soon, Vince and Helmut Lang. Add in the new Chestnut Hill Square development—home to Anthropologie and its BHLDN bridal shop-within-a-shop—plus the Mall at Chestnut Hill's new Madewell outpost and the forthcoming Uniqlo, and it's clear this 'burb is the place to be.

SNEAKERS

BODEGA

There's a Wizard of Oz quality to this sneaky sneaker store. Ignore the lowly mini-mart vibe that greets you (unless you want toilet paper or detergent) and head straight to the back. Slide over the Snapple machine, and there's the real party. This hidden passage leads to a secret shrine to kicks of all styles—Puma, Nike Chukkas and classic Vans—along with hip streetwear like retro Van Heusen jackets and graphic tees. Plus, Bodega always seems to be upping its game, whether through exclusive collabs or projects like this past spring's pop-up store in Tokyo.

UPGRADES
CHANEL AND VALENTINO

We've been wowed by the recent makeovers of two luxury powerhouses. First, Chanel moved from its No. 5 Newbury address to No. 6, expanding to a 10,000-square-foot space designed by acclaimed architect (and certified character—Google him) Peter Marino. Coco herself would approve of the design, meant to channel her Parisian apartment—picture Swarovski-covered deer by artist Mark Swanson and sofas decked out in Chanel tweed. Not to be outdone, Valentino revealed its own new look in June, becoming the fourth U.S. location to boast the design concept from Stirling Prize winner David Chipperfield. Intended to evoke an intimate palazzo, it's rich with Venetian terrazzo, thick leather and plush carpets; ambient lighting and chandeliers let the ready-to-wear, handbags and shoes shine. Now Boston's chicest block looks even more glam.

LOCAL DESIGNER, JEWELRY
Sophie Hughes

Sophie Hughes knows her way around a hammer and anvil. Working with recycled gold and silver, she shapes raw metal into rough-hewn yet sophisticated pieces, sometimes finished with reclaimed gems. The results are subtle enough for everyday wear, but special enough to qualify as statement jewelry—so it's no surprise they've graced the runway at New York Fashion Week and gotten props from sources as far-flung as Elle China. Check out her handiwork, along with select pieces from other local talents, at Ore, her new South End atelier.

WELCOME RETURN DRESS

It's like that friend you haven't seen in a while, but fall right back in step with the moment you reunite. Such was the lovefest that ensued when Dress reopened in Beacon Hill a year after closing on Newbury Street. Although the boutique's name pays homage to the little black number of note, you can also play dress-up in tattered skinny jeans, bohemian tops and tuxedo shirt dresses. Envelope clutches, laser-cut oxfords and glitzy jewelry make for fine finishing touches. Welcome back, old friend.

WELCOME TREND
AMERICAN-MADE FASHION

When much fashion is made abroad under conditions that are questionable at best, it's heartening to see headlines touting a resurgence in heritage brands across the country—not to mention strides made by local manufacturers. Brighton-based New Balance invested in a midsole machine that will allow the company to sell a completely American-made shoe to the military as early as 2015. Just south of Boston, Randolph Engineering has released stylish new sunglasses lines (including the colorful Flash Collection) and seen sales grow by 40 percent from 2012 to 2013. And Newbury Street men's shop Ball and Buck, which carries only made-in-the-U.S. wares, is bringing more than 100 brands together for the third annual American Field pop-up, the biggest event yet. "AF reminds consumers there are amazing products made right here on American soil," says B&B founder Mark Bollman. Don't miss it on Sept. 13 and 14 at the Innovation and Design Building.

VIOLA LOVELY

Don't let the vintage sawhorses, industrial pipe racks and rustic floors fool you: This South End boutique is luxe. Opened in August 2013, it's already become a favorite for those with some extra cushion in their clothing budgets. Owner Lisa Cancelli-Picard is known for giving love to emerging designers like Golden Goose and Strom denim, and she also handpicks fashion faves such as Isabel Marant and Pedro Garcia. Jewelry by Parisian designer Marie Laure Chamorel and Thom Browne sunglasses round out the selections.

CRUSH

From laser-cut jackets to beaded maxi dresses, every trend is accounted for at Crush. The store is a whirlwind of colors and patterns, with labels such as Free People, Parker, Sw3 and Ella Moss, and there are swimsuits by Splendid and Shoshanna for beach-bound style. Owners (and longtime BFFs) Rebecca Penner and Laura Macris cultivate a warm and welcoming vibe, and their wallet-friendly prices mean that you can look like a million bucks without spending it.

Imagine: You, a comfy chair, a glass of scotch and a dedicated pro armed with measuring tape. Founded on the belief that custom-tailored clothes shouldn't break the bank, Blank Label offers half- and full-canvassed suits, blazers, trousers and tuxedos, with smart suiting starting at $575. Peak or notched lapels, breathable linen or super 130s wool, roped or soft shoulders? Staff will guide you through all the options, which allow you to build anything from a casual blazer to 007-worthy formalwear.

WOMEN'S SHOES

With Boston's reputation as a walking city, the right pair of shoes is a top priority. To find both fashion and function, look no further than Moxie. With a range of heel heights in casual loafers, wedges and ultra-glam T-strap sandals, styles come from shoe gurus including Kate Spade, Cole Haan, DVF and Cape Cod Supply Company. And don't forget a pair of Tory Burch flip-flops that will make your jellies jelly.

UGLY "CHIC" SANDALS

We'd written off normcore as a pseudo-trend, then realized that the concept may have legs—or, at least, feet—given the bizarre parade of Tevas, Birkenstocks, thick-strapped flatforms and other sandals of orthopedic appearance that have been parading across runways and fashion editorials. Such unflattering footwear has come from designers who should know better. (Proenza Schouler, Helmut Lang and Marni, we're looking at you.) Some stylists say you should wear them in place of ballet flats, but we hope the curtain has closed on this trend.

When the boss gets under your skin and nails you to a new deadline, you feel like pulling out your hair but instead you give the silent treatment to everyone you work with and won't make-up until they smooth things over and massage your ego.
Relax. We just opened.

BLOWOUT

Drybar

Drybar is a godsend for those of us who don't have time to wrestle with hair dryers. The three-story Back Bay blowout bar (with a branch in Newton) specializes exclusively in washing and styling tresses. All blowouts are $40, no matter your follicular woes. Perks include traveling services for those who prefer at-home heat, a detailed lookbook to help the creatively challenged and ultra-convenient hours—it opens daily at 7 am and operates till 10 pm on prime going-out nights.

COSMETICS

BLUEMERCURY

Co-founded by Harvard Business School alum Marla Malcolm Beck, this makeup and skin care emporium has representatives from each product line (like Laura Mercier, La Mer and NARS) meticulously train each staffer. And because it's also a spa, staffers can recommend products that go beyond aesthetics to complement your skin type. You'll feel confident in their picks—plus, they're always happy to give tutorials. You just might leave with a full makeover.

DAY SPA

G2O SPA + SALON

G2O turned 20 this year, and its recent renovation has left it looking better than ever—no small feat, considering that the 14,000-square-foot sanctuary already boasted a penthouse roof terrace for alfresco relaxation, a skylighted hot tub and even an "experience room" where clients unwind in herbal-infused steam and ice fog. With sister property Emerge now a part of G2O, look for new services such as LED light treatment, reiki crystal therapy and nonsurgical face-lifts.

FACIAL

MZ SKIN CARE

Owner Marianne Zullas specializes in custom facials, but aims to go more than skin deep. To that end, an on-staff health coach consults on nutrition and relaxation needs, and many clients opt for six-month treatment plans to incorporate new food and lifestyle choices. First-timers often begin with a Simply Organic facial using Zullas' favorite all-natural line, Starflower Essentials. The ultra-relaxing treatment includes a deep cleanse, a scrub, a peel and massage.

HAIR COLORIST

ALBANA ZE AT SHAG

Color maven Albana Ze has a devoted clientele at Shag, where she fixes hair disasters with color correction ("A lot of people come in with color from a box!") and gets creative with ombre. Favoring subtle looks, she's an expert at the foil-free balayage technique, painting highlights freehand for a more natural, sun-kissed style. But don't be afraid to request something a bit bold: Ze's happy to use "funky" colors, and she's amazingly diplomatic during consultations.

SALON MARC HARRIS

Stylists at these full-service salons, helmed by industry leader Marc Harris, have some of the most rigorous training in the business: Ambitious employees undergo a two-year apprentice program. Known for experimentation, the salons are embracing creative coloring techniques such as painted feathers and hair chalk this summer. Can't picture it? HAIR SALON, ETHNIC

SALON MONET

This 10-year-old salon boasts a passionate following thanks to vivacious stylist-owner Shellee Mendes, who trained at James Joseph and Vidal Sassoon. Monet (so named because Mendes values her stylists as artists) specializes in extensions and curly hair, using the all-natural PhytoSpecific line. The salon is kid-friendly, and Mendes says it's a godsend for cross-cultural families looking for a one-stop shop. There's also conscientious attention to punctuality, so expired meters are one less thing to stress over.

HAIR STRAIGHTENING

AVANTI SALON

This newly expanded salon has two exceptional weapons. First, there's an entire room devoted to straightening—which can be an, ahem, aromatic process, depending on the chemicals used. The salon-within-a-salon has windows and a special vent, making the experience bright, soothing and odorless. Second, there's expert stylist Rebecca Serra, a favorite for her flattening and blowout skills. For those who embrace curls but long for manageability, opt for the $40 Curly Girl treatment, which offers bounce without frizz.

PHENOMENON

November Project

At these massive group workouts, everyone is welcome, "especially those who prefer to exercise outside, instead of with machines," says co-founder Brogan Graham. The brainchild of two contagiously enthusiastic former Northeastern University rowers, November Project meets every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, either at Harvard Stadium or at tweeted locations citywide. Participants run, crunch, squat and plank as the sun rises, and while we won't call them painless, the workouts are completely free—something that hasn't changed, even as the Project has spread to 16 other cities and clinched the cover of Runner's World.

HOT SHAVE

TWEED BARBERS

A throwback to the halcyon era of barbershops, this swanky man-cave employs nine skilled barbers, each with a minimum of 10 years' experience. In addition to haircuts, they offer hot-lather, straight-razor shaves—the closest to old-school style in the business. "We're trying to bring back the genuine, classic barbershop experience," says owner Peter Solomon. And with oak floors, oak-paneled walls, reclining chairs, steam towels and affable patter, Mad Men's Don Draper would feel right at home.

LOCAL PRODUCT

After losing a sister to melanoma, Cheryl Clarkson vowed to make a difference in other women's lives. Today for SkinHealth Centers, her Boston and suburban medical spas, the MIT graduate whips up antioxidant-rich skin care products. These include powerful sunscreens packed with green tea and vitamins (minus the additives and fragrances that plague many commercial brands), plus soothing salves to combat acne and the effects of aging. Staff physicians also offer Botox, body contouring and laser hair removal.

MASSAGE
BLISS

Most spas aim to soothe. At Bliss, it's all about energy, from the brightly lit rooms to the R&B soundtrack. Bliss prides itself on cheeky massage add-ons, like "love handler" tightening treatments. A Boston favorite is 24-Heaven for dry skin, which includes an oatmeal mask, a Vichy shower and lathering with intense body balm. A sink-side tester bar—with free product samples—is a welcome touch. MEN'S HAIRCUT
MARY CHHENG AT JAMES JOSEPH

Mary Chheng is a fixture at James Joseph's Newbury Street flagship, where she's relieved male hair hardships for 13 years. She specializes in texturing (read: she helps guys feel better about thinning manes), and she's gifted at styling hair to suit a client's contours and account for cowlicks. Some call it talent, but she calls it instinct. "I can look at someone's face and know exactly what they want," she says.

VISELLI SANTORO SALON

Viselli's team of six updo stylists specialize in milestone events. At a consultation, they'll pair you with a stylist suited to your aesthetic—classic? avant-garde?—then conduct a trial run to experiment with options. Before your wedding, they'll travel up to 90 minutes to get you camera-ready, and there's a makeup artist on staff to complete the look. An added bonus: Their extensions really do look real.

WAXING
EUROPEAN WAX CENTER

It's nothing but waxing at these skin-sensitive salons, which use 100 percent all-natural beeswax imported from France. The wax is super-soft and adheres only to hair, resulting in a practically pain-free experience. Each waxing specialist undergoes a seven-day training program to learn the brand's patented Comfort Wax technique, which includes niceties such as serum applications for pesky ingrown follicles and calming cream for those post-wax bumps.

EXERCISE CLASS
The Handle Bar

Big chains Soul Cycle and Flywheel made their way to Boston during the past year, but homegrown studio the Handle Bar offers its own spin on the trend, with cycling classes that are intense, personalized and—dare we say it—fun. Customization is key. Rides are synchronized to music with mood lighting, and each instructor chooses the vibe. If you're not as fit as your fellow riders, never fear; you can control the bike's intensity using a resistance knob. Insiders recommend scheduling a class with Elise Petersen, Lena Rakijian, Sarah Maguire or Cara Tramontozzi, the Handle Bar's most-followed instructors.

WOMEN'S HAIRCUT
SALON EVA MICHELLE

"Our salon is very education-driven," says Salon Eva Michelle co-owner Michelle Lee, whose squad of stylists takes classes every month on "cutting, styling and everything in between." The result? Terrific consistency, regardless of whether you see Michelle, co-owner Eva Mustafai or any other member of their hand-picked team—each stylist has a long working history with both owners. Lee takes pride in her staff's prowess at both classic and creative cuts, complemented by skilled corrective color, extensions and blowouts.

WELCOME ADDITION

Brooklyn Boulders

Here, Somerville really is the new Brooklyn. Founded by three Babson College graduates, Brooklyn Boulders—twice the size of the New York original—is part rock-climbing gym and part community center. In addition to climbing walls, there are work and event spaces, sit-up stations, yoga classes and fridges stocked with energy bars and Life Force juices. A $22 day pass ($18 for students) affords access to the whole facility, and climbing classes taught by AMGA-certified instructors will make even novice climbers feel like Spider-Man.

BRIDESMAID DRESS

FLAIR

A trip to this sweet dress shop feels like a mini getaway with your girlfriends. Consultants book only three bridal parties at a time, so you won't fight other ladies for changing rooms. Each hourlong appointment begins with a 10-minute chat with Flair's staff, who hand-select dresses suited to your wedding's style and your bridesmaids' body types. P.S. This is the only boutique in the area to carry hot designer Jenny Yoo.

CAKE

PARTY FAVORS

The sugar wizards at Party Favors concoct unusual custom cakes for the sweetest kind of happily-ever-after, whether you crave fondant flowers or rustic milk-chocolate leaves, white chocolate mousse or French mocha buttercream filling. They're led by pastry chef John Pergantis, who trained at the Culinary Institute of America and has been whipping up memorable confections at Party Favors since 1992.

Sweet Tooth and the Sugarbabies

This versatile eight-member band covers all the bases. The Berklee College of Music students and graduates boast resumes that include everything from stints with Stomp to collaborations with music legends like Quincy Jones. Legions of fans say that their high-energy versions of Motown grooves, hip-hop hits and almost anything in between sound even better than the originals. "We try to be as authentic as possible," says percussionist Eytan Nicholson.

CATERING

MAX ULTIMATE FOOD

There's no such thing as a standard wedding package from this innovative caterer, which tailors gourmet celebrations with seasonal, local food. So local, they've even sourced meat directly from one couple's own farm. During an initial meeting, clients discuss everything from their lifestyle to favorite restaurants, shops and vacations to craft a menu that reflects cherished dining and drinking experiences. The result? A reception that feels like a meal at the beloved restaurant of your dreams.

ENGAGEMENT RINGS

BARMAKIAN JEWELERS

This jewelry behemoth—with a downtown location and an emporium in the suburbs—has one of the area's largest selections of loose diamonds. They also offer custom mountings that are created in-house (a rare perk for such a vast store), and discerning customers have plenty of styles to choose from, with new ones added each week by staff jewelers. They know how to keep couples happy: Barmakian has been in business since 1910.

FLORIST
FORÊT DESIGN STUDIO

Helmed by former Anthropologie designers, Forêt showcases unusual flower installations in creative spaces. (A recent wedding at the Artists for Humanity EpiCenter included a 4 1/2-foot floral wreath that served as an archway.) Rose Mattos and Erin Heath are experts at foraging unique metals and aged terra cotta in lieu of traditional glass vessels. Plus, they work closely with local farms to source custom-hued blooms, ensuring that your bouquet is one-of-a-kind.

Trying on wedding gowns can be a fraught experience. Here, it's like hanging at a friend's house. After spending time in marketing and creative services at J.Crew and Madewell, Alix Childs now presides over this airy loft that blends high design with indie bohemia. (She also lends her eye to The Improper's style page.) Browse designers like Elizabeth Fillmore and Leanne Marshall at laid-back, one-on-one appointments, usually set to music. "This is all about having fun," she says.

Hello Love

Casey Harrison prides herself on "eliminating cheesy wedding photography." She believes that "your wedding is not a photo shoot," which means no overedited pictures and few posed shots. Instead, she's an expert at capturing a wedding's natural flow—including guests' moves on the dance floor—with unobtrusive, photojournalistic skill, both digitally and with toy-camera film.

Nothing spices up staid wedding portraits like a photo station with fun props, whether it's Dreamlove Photography's mustaches and top hats or Ruby Shoes' boas and Elton John–style glasses. For sheer creativity, check out the offerings from Leah Haydock Photography: Her accessories include bear costumes (cozy!) and lobster hats. Or get the picture with Adam DeTour's sets, which incorporate couches, coffee tables, paintings and vintage telephones.

since the salon opened five years ago. He's known for elaborate creations: tendrils, curls, braids that flow into floral shapes, you name it. Start with a coiffure consultation, followed by a trial, and then, on the big day, beautify at the Back Bay salon with champagne, cupcakes and sandwiches, catered by the adjacent Mandarin Oriental.

INVITATIONS

PAPER MOSS

This local letterpress studio creates gorgeous cotton invitations that weave together unexpected elements of your wedding. (For one couple getting married at the Liberty Hotel, owners Emily Hostetler and Anna Berglund incorporated the venue's stained-glass window design into their envelope liner.) "Creative and open" couples should come with motif, pattern and icon ideas that symbolize their romance, then let the talented designers do the rest.

MAKEUP

KACIE CORBELLE

"Working with brides is a collaboration," says Kacie Corbelle, who specializes in a high-fashion aesthetic made accessible for all. Her fans say she's brilliant at sizing up faces and figuring out what colors look best, a skill she developed styling photo shoots for magazines and catalogues and working with clients like Gisele Bündchen. Corbelle is based in the South End, where brides visit for hourlong consults, but she travels for weddings—with her cheery demeanor in tow to ease any jitters.

PLACE TO REGISTER

When it comes to selection, nothing beats Bloomingdale's. The department store stocks top lines like Marchesa by Lenox, Nespresso and Cuisinart, plus exclusive house brands like Hudson Park. A personal registry consultant and the Thank You Card Manager tool—which generates a list of who bought what when—make the process painless. And clients get deep discounts on dresses, menswear and fine jewelry when they register.

PLANNER

WHIM EVENTS

"Our goal is to create an 'aha!' moment where a couple can relax and not have to think about a thing," says Whim co-founder Natalie Pinney, who becomes a trusted adviser and friend while plotting details with couples over cocktails and trips to the flower market. The Whim team has strong connections with top photographers and venues. "We create relationships to find just the right vendors," Pinney says. "We're kind of like matchmakers!" Co-owner Moira Thompson's background in floral design is another bonus, making decor a snap.

RECEPTION VENUE

WANG THEATRE

This 89-year-old former movie palace, recently spotted in American Hustle, is known for its Grand Lobby, modeled after the Palace of Versailles. Entertain up to 250 guests beneath the ornate chandeliers and domed ceiling, and pose for photos on the sweeping staircase. The venue is available throughout August and during three-day holiday weekends year-round. And with just one event scheduled per day, you'll be the star of the show.

ALAN ROULEAU

If James Bond had a Newbury Street couturier, it would be Alan Rouleau. This tux impresario makes bespoke three-piece formalwear for discriminating grooms—and brides—at his third-floor showroom, which is also home to creature comforts like flat-screen TVs and a bar. After all, coordinating suit linings with your wedding colors and debating over mohair vs. Italian wool is far more civilized while sipping scotch.

WEDDING RINGS
Minter & Richter

Craftsman Scott Richter began his career creating custom swords. Now he's a lover, not a fighter. Richter incorporates rare, romantically significant materials into his durable titanium-band inlays, whether it's sand from the beach where a couple first kissed or barrel fragments from a favorite wine. "People have even sent us pieces of moose antlers," says Minter Richter, who helps her husband run the business.

METRO BOSTON'S PLUGGED-IN GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND SUMMER SOUNDS

AGENDA for 7/9–8/5

What the folk?

Fest on.

SINCE ITS START WAY BACK in 1959, the Newport Folk Festival has served as a platform for folk artists on the rise. Early bills boasted then little-known names like Bob Dylan and Johnny Cash, and eminent contemporary bands like the Avett Brothers started out with gigs on Newport's smaller stages and still return for headlining shows. Over the years, the scenic seaside fest has evolved to include a variety of genres (Dylan famously played the first electric set of his career at Newport), and plugged-in acts today are as varied as musical Renaissance man Beck and British hardcore scenester-turned-folk singer Frank Turner. This year's edition continues the festival's long tradition of mixing veteran performers and young upstarts with a stacked bill, including Lucius, Boston's own Lake Street Dive, Deer Tick, Kurt Vile, Shovels & Rope and Band of Horses. Ryan Adams, Jack White and Mavis Staples headline the sold-out festival (try StubHub!), marking three full days of eclectic music from July 25 to 27. / Alexandra Cavallo

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

MUSIC OF THE NIGHT Andrew Lloyd Webber's The Phantom of the Opera enjoys a spectacular reboot for its new North American tour, fresh off a sold-out circuit in the UK. Tony Award-winning producer Cameron Mackintosh's Phantom boasts a cast and orchestra of 52, making this telling of the brilliant but haunted Phantom and Christine, his "Angel of Music," one of the largest productions currently on tour. New scenery, lighting designs, staging and choreography breathe fresh life into this beloved musical, though the tale of the masked genius and his beautiful muse hardly needs the help. Webber's soaring music, dark and effective, remains one of the most thrilling Broadway scores of all time. Catch a show before it disappears into the night while it plays at the Boston Opera House through July 20. / Alexandra Cavallo

WIZ KIDS Toto, we have a feeling we're not in Boston anymore. At least, not when we find ourselves lost in The Wizard of Oz's land of Munchkins, flying monkeys and stupor-inducing poppy fields, where Dorothy (and her little dog, too) realizes there's no place like home—even if that home is rural Kansas in sepia. This year marks the 75th anniversary of the beloved fantasy film, and you've got two opportunities to see it back on the big screen. Follow the yellow brick road to an alfresco showing at the Boston Harbor Hotel on July 11, or catch the pop-culture classic at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on July 21. / Susanna Yudkin PHOTO: PHOTOFEST

Reviews by Brett Michel

22 JUMP STREET ★★★ In Phil Lord and Christopher Miller's worthy sequel to their big-screen update of the TV show that launched Johnny Depp's career, Deputy Chief Hardy (Nick Offerman) dryly intones the following to officers Schmidt (Jonah Hill) and Jenko (Channing Tatum): "Ladies, nobody gave a s--t about the Jump Street reboot. Anyone with half a brain, myself included, thought it was destined to fail, spectacularly. But you got lucky. So now, this department has invested a lot of money to make sure Jump Street keeps going. We've doubled the budget, as if spending twice the money guaranteed twice the profit." This winking comedy, from the directors who also helmed the surprise smash The Lego Movie, is a sequel about sequels—and it nearly doubled the opening weekend gross of its predecessor. Sending the cops from high school to college to do "the same undercover student thing," the film also mercilessly skewers romantic dramas, as the partners decide to "investigate other people" in an "open investigation," with hilarious results. "Do the same thing as last time," Hardy advises. "Everyone's happy." Yes, even this critic. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

BEGIN AGAIN ★★★ This film's original title, Can a Song Save Your Life?, was probably a little too on-the-nose—even for a narrative as sincere, heartfelt and corny as Once writer/director John Carney's latest music-driven confection. So Begin Again he did with a new name for this New York-set charmer, which got lost in the shuffle when it premiered at last September's Toronto Film Festival. It took a while to arrive in multiplexes, but saving this small-scale toe-tapper for summer is a canny bit of counterprogramming. After all, while it shares some of the same shaggy-dog pleasures as Carney's 2006 crowd-pleaser, nothing blows up, no one gets shot and the only hero to show up on screen is Dan Mulligan, a fallen record-label co-founder. Sure, he's played by Mark Ruffalo—the Incredible Hulk himself—but Dan's the only one in need of saving. That is, until he drunkenly stumbles into an East Village club and hears lovelorn songwriter Greta (Keira Knightley, who can sing!) and recognizes the potential for mutual salvation—and Carney scores a hit once again. (At Coolidge, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

BELLE ★★★ Director Amma Asante's second feature is inspired by the story of Dido Elizabeth Belle (a luminous Gugu Mbatha-Raw), the mixed-race daughter of Capt. Sir John Lindsay (Matthew Goode in a cameo). Despite being illegitimate, she's raised in a loving household by her aristocratic great-uncle Lord Mansfield and his wife (Tom Wilkinson and Emily Watson, both in fine form), yet the darkness of her skin prevents her from fully participating in the traditions of her noble standing. While her white—and also illegitimate—cousin Elizabeth (Sarah Gadon) is readied for marriage, Belle is headed for a life as a wealthy spinster. But as formula dictates, she meets an attractive young idealist, John Davinier (newcomer Sam Reid, in an unfortunate wig), a lowly vicar's son. It's all captured in a candy-colored digital palette that's distressingly become the norm, flying in the face of filmed costume dramas of the past—but then, this is a story driven by change, with Davinier and Belle challenging her great-uncle to do right by his role as lord chief justice, helping bring an end to slavery in England. (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

CHEF ★★★ This isn't a movie about Jon Favreau. Sure, he wrote, directed and starred in this comedy about a once-hot gourmet chef, Carl Casper, who's in a creative rut. After being called out by his critics, Casper begins serving up delectable Cuban sandwiches from a food truck, winning back favor from customers and critics alike by returning to his roots. Favreau's a filmmaker who impressed with the hit indies Swingers and Made, and then a couple of massive Iron Man movies, before making the joyless critical and commercial failure Cowboys & Aliens. But Chef is a small picture, a tasty concoction in which his simmering acting chops are brought to a boil by 10-year-old Emjay Anthony, who delightfully underplays Casper's son, Percy, as the two bond over the heat of the truck's grill on a cross-country trip. Is Favreau as thin-skinned as Casper, who gets into a very public social media spat with one of his earliest supporters? Who cares, when such big talents as Dustin Hoffman, John Leguizamo, Sofia Vergara, Oliver Platt, Scarlett Johansson and Robert Downey Jr. are along for the ride? (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

EDGE OF TOMORROW ★★★★ Doug Liman's entertaining new science-fiction film easily could have become another high-concept, low-return failure like Jumper. Hell, look at that lame name: Edge of Tomorrow. The director should have trusted his original title: All You Need Is Kill, the same as the Hiroshi Sakurazaka novel on which it's based. But the title happens to be the only glaring flaw of this film following Maj. William Cage (Tom Cruise), who's essentially trapped within the plot of Groundhog Day—only now, déjà vu equals death. Unlike Bill Murray's Phil Connors, Cage almost always finds his endlessly repeating day concluding with him battling aliens and getting killed in inventively excruciating ways, a setup that mines nearly as many laughs as you'd find in Murray's classic comedy. Love Cruise or hate him (or simply find him couch-jumping crazy), the film offers something for everyone; fans will eat this up, while haters will delight as the actor dies in countless hilarious ways befitting the best of Wile E. Coyote and his encounters with Acme's finest anvils. Don't be surprised if you find yourself buying a ticket again after the movie is over. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Godzilla ★★½ Sixty years after Ishiro Honda unleashed the H-bomb-spawned "Gojira" on Japanese audiences still reeling from the horrors of Hiroshima, Godzilla once again breathes atomic fire in director Gareth Edwards' crowd-pleasing reboot. But while the scaly sexagenarian glimpsed here is vastly superior to the wrong-headed monster seen in Roland Emmerich's disastrous 1998 reimagining starring Matthew Broderick, at least that version of the Thunder Lizard wasn't reduced to playing a cameo role in his own film. Nevertheless, Edwards' reverential rendition of the King of the Monsters—while larger and created with expensive CGI—is closer in design and temperament to Honda's, which was nothing more than a man inside a rubber suit stomping on miniature reproductions of Tokyo. So it's a shame that Edwards' admirable interpretation relegates everyone's favorite reptile mostly to the shadows. And unfortunately, though the movie's advertising prominently features Bryan Cranston as conspiracy-minded Joe Brody, the Breaking Bad star's character doesn't survive long enough to witness Godzilla's late-film reveal; the real star is Kick-Ass's Aaron Taylor-Johnson as Joe's thinly written son, Ford. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

How to Train Your Dragon 2 ★★★½ When How to Train Your Dragon hit theaters, DreamWorks Animation finally offered Disney/Pixar some legitimate competition—not only visually, but also with its level of storytelling and character sophistication. Sure, co-directors Dean DeBlois and Chris Sanders had fashioned a familiar story with their tale of Hiccup (voiced by Jay Baruchel), the scrawny Viking who bonds with the creature that's supposed to be his sworn enemy. Toothless, his cat-like dragon steed, shared DNA with the alien in DeBlois and Sanders' earlier success, Lilo & Stitch, which also featured a youth secretly fostering a lethal beast. And while it may have lacked the depth of Pixar's best, it was still a real beauty. Flying solo this time, DeBlois picks up five years after Hiccup and Toothless united man and monster in the Vikings' island community. The pair spend their days soaring through the skies and charting new territories, until they encounter the mysterious Dragon Rider—and a devastating new threat. While this gorgeously rendered sequel isn't as humorous as its predecessor, it's darker, richer and more mature—much like its older and wiser protagonist. (At Boston Common, Fenway, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Jersey Boys ★★½ While Clint Eastwood's latest directorial effort is a hit-or-miss affair, you might not want to miss hearing the hits of Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons, whose rise and fall (and rise again) is dramatized in a more realistic fashion than you might expect from a film version of a Broadway musical. This isn't one of those razzle-dazzle affairs where characters spontaneously burst into song and dance across the screen in a flurry of motion. Instead, the group's music is presented as live performances while they're touring, recording or appearing on American Bandstand or The Ed Sullivan Show. But while the Jersey boys might not sing any dialogue, they do address the audience directly from time to time. Does it work? Let's just say Eastwood's not exactly Martin Scorsese. So, it's unfortunate to see him introduce a local made man (Christopher Walken) early on; the mob aspects and other darker edges are fairly toothless. Group infighting, financial problems and domestic dramas pile up predictably, until you wish the Four Seasons would stop turning to speak to us and just sing. Still, your parents will love it. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Maleficent ★★ After questionably rebooting Alice in Wonderland as a vehicle for Johnny Depp's Mad Hatter, Disney's at it again, needlessly revisiting Sleeping Beauty in live action from the perspective of Maleficent, who's given high-cheekboned life by Angelina Jolie. Continuing the violent tradition of Disney's live-action misfire The Lone Ranger, screenwriter Linda Woolverton spins a wheel around rape culture, as future king Stefan (Sharlto Copley) revisits the moors where he shared a childhood romance with Maleficent, then a young winged fairy. Returning to the older, lovesick girl, he essentially roofies her. Waking alone, she's horrified to discover that Stefan has clipped her wings. His daughter, Princess Aurora (Elle Fanning), is reduced to a supporting role, but a heavy still has to die, as all irredeemable Disney villains must. Ah, but it's not Maleficent. In this unsettling revision, she's a victim, and her trauma is palpable. Fun for the whole family! (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

A Million Ways to Die in the West ★ With a title like A Million Ways to Die in the West, one wishes that director, producer, co-writer and star Seth MacFarlane might have written a painful death for his cowardly character, a sheep farmer named Albert, as penance for having made a spoof this remarkably unfunny. The Family Guy creator has assembled an impressive cast, including Oscar winner Charlize Theron, Amanda Seyfried, Giovanni Ribisi, Sarah Silverman, Neil Patrick Harris and Liam Neeson, who made for a better villain when voicing a character created from LEGO. But then, The LEGO Movie understood Western movie tropes far better than MacFarlane, whose only point of reference for the genre appears to be Back to the Future Part III, which might explain this film's cameo from Christopher Lloyd and a certain DeLorean. Yep, expect a lot of pop culture references in place of punch lines, plus a million ways to kill a joke. If you enjoy fart humor set in the Old West, Mel Brooks' Blazing Saddles just hit home video in a wonderful new 40th anniversary edition—this is just a crappy imitation. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Rover ★★★ Australian director David Michod flees the Melbourne backdrop of his first feature (2010's Animal Kingdom) for the scorched earth of many an Ozploitation thriller, taking actor Guy Pearce along for the ride again. The Rover takes place "10 years after the collapse," and that's all the setup needed for this nihilistic trip through a lawless land, as Pearce's bearded, emaciated and single-minded drifter tracks down the men who stole his sole possession—his car. As viewers of the Mad Max films all know, a set of wheels is just about the only thing that matters in the Outback. And if you happen to come across the mentally challenged brother (a scuzzied-up Robert Pattinson, impressing with a range that runs darker than Twilight) of the leader of the trio that carjacked you, all the better. From this murderous gang to the enterprising woman (Gillian Jones) who pimps out her grandson, this is a violent downer in a genre that trades in bleakness (Wake in Fright, anyone?). Bring water—and some tourniquets. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Third Person (no stars) Who would have guessed that Michael Bay's Transformers wouldn't be the worst film appearing in theaters right now? But then, Bay doesn't have two Oscar wins to enable his pretensions of being An Artist, like Crash director Paul Haggis. That award-winning piece of pap turned the sprawling expanse of Los Angeles into a town no bigger than a block, since all of that film's resident racists seemed to bump into one another an awful lot. A decade later, Haggis tarnishes the memory of his father by dedicating this awful film to his old man. The movie expands the earlier picture's milieu, taking place across New York, Paris and Rome, only this time the interconnecting stories revolve around a stand-in for the writer/director, a novelist played by Liam Neeson. Mila Kunis, Adrien Brody, Olivia Wilde, James Franco, Maria Bello and Kim Basinger also appear (and overlap), building to a confusing denouement that crashes and burns. (At Kendall Square.)

Transformers: Age of Extinction ★ Director Michael Bay places Dorchester's Mark Wahlberg in the townie's second film in a row that finds him playing a Texan, which is improbable enough. But casting him as Cade Yeager, genius inventor? Yup, we're in Bay territory all right. Underlining this point, Nicola Peltz appears as Cade's 17-year-old jailbait daughter, and while Wahlberg chastises every character in the film for ogling her ass in a barely-there pair of short-shorts, clearly he should be taking it up with Bay, who never met an actress he didn't degrade. Ah, but Bay would have us believe he's also a master of irony, as when an elderly movie palace landlord (Richard Riehle), who's surrounded by discarded reels of 35 mm film, tells Cade, "The movies today suck! Sequels and remakes!" You see, this dour, digitally lensed fourth Transformers film doubles as the start of a second trilogy, one that finds truck-turned-robot Optimus Prime riding on the back of a fire-breathing Dinobot that gallops into China—because that's where the money is. And really, isn't that what this Transformadness is really all about? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

X-Men: Days of Future Past ★★★ Fanboys might breathlessly protest: "Kitty Pryde can't do that! Her powers only allow her to phase herself and others through objects, not through the decades! Plus, in the comic books, she's the one who's projected into the past!" Correct, nerdlingers, but as popular as Juno's Ellen Page may be (she reprises her role as Pryde in the third X-Men film helmed by Bryan Singer), she ain't this franchise's star. So, Singer sends Hugh Jackman's Wolverine back to 1973, where he must reunite former (and future) friends Professor Charles Xavier and Erik Lehnsherr/Magneto (James McAvoy and Michael Fassbender, portraying younger versions of Patrick Stewart and Ian McKellen's characters). But bringing these bitter frenemies together is just the beginning. The three, aided by Hank McCoy/Beast (Nicholas Hoult), must prevent shapeshifting Mystique (Jennifer Lawrence) from assassinating mutant-phobe scientist Bolivar Trask (Peter Dinklage), an event that would set in motion the end of Homo sapiens and Homo superiors alike. Sound convoluted? It is, but it also makes for one of the better entries among the seven films set in Marvel's mutant universe. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

RITUAL PUNK The official motto of Rohnert Park is "the friendly city"—but Ceremony may not have gotten the memo. Founded in that California town (which also lent its name to the quintet's third studio album), the progressive hardcore band has a gripping, brutal sound and musical influences ranging from Infest to Pink Floyd. Over the course of several albums with famed indie label Matador and the locally based Bridge Nine Records, Ceremony's music has evolved from jarring powerviolence to more experimental, kaleidoscopic post-punk, so we're pumped to hear what their forthcoming album will hold. Lace up your combat boots and get a preview when their summer tour stops by the Sinclair on July 20. / Spencer Shannon

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

THE ART OF WAR It's one of the most iconic images of Americana: a steely-visaged Uncle Sam, his finger pointing toward the viewer as he calls upon young patriots to enlist. Now, 100 years after the start of World War I, James Montgomery Flagg's I Want You for U.S. Army has marched into Boston. Modeled after the artist's own face, the famous poster joins 50 other wartime works from the U.S. and Europe (including this colorful naval-recruitment number by Richard Fayerweather) in Over There! Posters from World War I. Uncle Sam wants you to see him and the rest of the crew in person, starting July 26 at the Museum of Fine Arts. / Julianne McShane

BALAYAGE BY NICOLE
Balayage is a freehand method where the color is applied by hand rather than using the traditional foiling technique. Starting in France as a 'sweeping' way of doing highlights, The Loft Salon's own Nicole Welch has perfected it to include lowlights as well. This allows her to pick and choose where the color goes, fully customizing it to your style and needs. One of the best benefits of Balayage is that it completely avoids a harsh root line as it grows out, meaning that you aren't chained to a strict 'every 6 weeks' regiment.

WANDER AND LUST

The brand of soul-searching travel Gilbert popularized with her hit 2006 memoir Eat, Pray, Love has inspired a host of like-minded works in the eight years since its release (including a feature film starring Julia Roberts). It makes sense, then, that Gilbert's return to fiction, The Signature of All Things, follows a woman on an international journey of self-discovery—but this one's set in the 19th century. When Alma's disastrous marriage ends after one week, she takes to the road, dedicating herself to her passion for botany. Her goal is to learn about plants, but, as is the way with Gilbert's protagonists, she gains much knowledge about herself along the way. We learn a lot too: The tale is dense with facts and sweeping in scope, exploring evolution, spiritualism and other obsessions of the era. Travel to the Coolidge Corner Theatre to catch Gilbert on July 13. | Hannah Feeney

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

ALL SMILES

MISSIVES FROM THE JET SET

Kelley Tuthill, David Brown and Elisha Daniels at A Taste and A Toast

Jeff Merselis and Gina Morda at the MFA Summer Party

Frank Amelia and Stephen Labuda at the MFA Summer Party

Bob Kraft and Ricki Noel Lander at the Camp Harbor View Beach Ball

Jack Connors at the Camp Harbor View Beach Ball

IT'S ALL A MATTER OF PERSPECTIVE

With proper instruction, most of us could probably twist a balloon into a dachshund, but that's a far cry from the Willy Wonka-worthy creations made by Janice Lee Kelly, of balloon-art biz Float, for A Taste and A Toast—a benefit for Forsyth, a research institute focused on oral health.

Guests were greeted by an elaborate triumphal arch and then partied beneath a giant replica of DNA, all made from balloons, which prompted one incorrigible attendee to mutter, "Good thing I don't have a pin."

Meanwhile, the city's top restaurants served up light bites from chefs such as Ming Tsai, Tiffani Faison, Will Gilson and Louis DiBiccari, while TV anchor Kelley Tuthill battled the bad acoustics like a champ to recognize the evening's honorees: Dr. Anthony Volpe and Flour power chick Joanne Chang. The crowd included the always upbeat Bob Gertsen, silver fox Shawn Patrick O'Neill, the statuesque Liz Page, Dover socialites Alan and Patricia Martinovich, former Miss Illinois Liz Brunner and her handsome husband, Craig Stockmal, and one person who said, "Knowing my luck, this is the party where I'll be walking around with something stuck in my teeth."

Not content with the wine, another attendee said, "They should have pumped in some laughing gas." But the evening's funniest remark went to the person who described a now-defunct gay bar by saying, "It was great. The crowd there would make even a shriveled old thing like me feel pretty."

PAGING CROCKETT AND TUBBS

There was a distinct Miami Vice vibe to the Museum of Fine Arts' Summer Party, which transformed the Shapiro Family Courtyard into a slice of South Beach with tented VIP cabanas, celebrity DJs AndrewAndrew and a crowd turned out in their tropical best.

Prominent among the throng of 700 were co-chairs Jeff Merselis, Elizabeth Marcoulier and Gina Morda, genetic lottery winners Alix and Ollie Childs, brunette bombshell J.C. Monahan and her handsome other half, Jim Farrell, New York power publicist Jack Yeaton, the incomparable Doris Yaffe, soon-to-be L.A. dwellers Aaron Pike and Steve Sukman, the ever-stylish Shane Merriweather, Beacon Hillion Jason Winmill, artists Adrienne Schlow and Jaybo Monk, bespectacled hipster Bilvox Neidlinger, the über-suave Jas Bhogal, Patriot Julian Edelman, arts patrons Paul and Pia Miller, the hale and hearty Robert White, saucy socialite Sabra Katz, international man of mystery Christian Bailey, force of nature Laura Baldini (leaving a trail of sequins behind her) and one man who said, "I thought this party was trousers-optional."

It's hard to imagine a better-looking or better-dressed crowd, which prompted one woman to counsel her friend: "I think there's good husband-hunting here. Just make sure he's only artsy, and not gay."

"I thought this party was trousers-optional."

HELLO MUDDAH, HELLO FADDUH

There are worse fates than sipping cocktails, enjoying an elegant tented dinner and watching the sun set over the city skyline from the Harbor Islands, so not surprisingly, it was a high-octane crowd that gathered on Long Island for the seventh annual Camp Harbor View Beach Ball.

Among the power players who helped to raise more than $4 million to send inner-city kids to the camp: co-founder Jack Connors and board member John Fish, co-chair Roberta Weiner and her dashing husband, Steve, U.S. Sen. Ed Markey, Hizzoner Marty Walsh, über-philanthropists Holly and David Bruce, the amazingly named Renuka and Dartagnan Brown, banking bigwig Bernie Fulp and the flawless Carol, the soignée Barbara Greenwald, impossibly pretty pair Nicole and Jeff Bellows, Patriots grand pooh-bah Bob Kraft and the fetching Ricki Noel Lander and others of an equally sparkly ilk.

"I wear sunglasses so I don't have to worry about eye makeup," said a woman of a certain age, but shades did come in handy. As Connors put it: "There's going to be a $5,000 surcharge for the sunset."

The view, in fact, provoked numerous comments, including the following: "The only thing worth looking at at my summer camp was the counselors removing leeches after we went water skiing." ◆

MUSIC TO OUR EARS

"I DON'T EVER WANT TO BE STUCK IN ONE genre," says our cover subject, Dutch ReBelle. Us neither—hence the wide-ranging sounds that surface in our Music issue. Paul Robicheau's roundup of 10 top local acts (ReBelle included) skips from hip-hop to chamber-pop, freewheeling folk to dance-floor-ready synth-punk. And I shouldn't neglect soulful pop, the home turf of Lake Street Dive. In a second feature, Robicheau profiles the Boston-bred quartet dubbed "the year's best new band" by Rolling Stone, who share how they fell "ass-backward into success."

Elsewhere, Alexandra Cavallo chats with a local bassist turned chef and checks in with a new music-themed hotel that draws on the Fenway and Kenmore 'hood's storied rock scene. Lydia Santangelo serves up a palate-cleansing fashion spread, full of crisp whites worth wearing long after Labor Day. And Jonathan Soroff interviews Mia Michaels, whose Emmy-winning work you may have seen on So You Think You Can Dance—and whose choreography you can catch right now in a world-premiere musical in Cambridge. Here's hoping you find plenty of fodder to refresh your summer soundtrack.

SOUND DESIGN

THE NEW VERB HOTEL CHANNELS FENWAY'S BYGONE ROCK SCENE.

The Day the Music Lived

These days, Sox Country bears little resemblance to the Fenway/Kenmore of the '70s and '80s, when it was a rock 'n' roll enclave, home to iconic clubs like the Rat and frequented by acts like the Velvet Underground and the J. Geils Band. Bill's Bar stood as the last vestige of that bygone era. Until now.

When hotelier Robin Brown and developer Steve Samuels took ownership of Fenway's Howard Johnson—a worn holdover that stood out from the swiftly gentrified neighborhood—they decided not to raze the old motel. Instead, they retained the original structure and transformed it into the music-themed Verb Hotel, which opened on Aug. 1 as "living proof of the history of what this whole area is about," Brown says. "There are so many different characters that came through this area—it's phenomenal."

To capture that history, they tapped David Bieber, former archivist of the now-defunct Boston Phoenix, which last called Fenway home. He's collected music memorabilia—flyers, ticket stubs, promo photos, set lists bearing boot prints from dingy club floors—for most of his life, but never knew quite what he was saving it for. Then the Verb reached out. "That opened the boxes and put some sunlight on these things," he says.

Bieber selected 40 to 50 pieces from his vast collection—including decades-old Phoenix covers—to adorn the hotel's walls. The memorabilia addresses "all categories of music and all kinds of different performers," Bieber says. "Gang Green was the Boston band that could've been Green Day before Green Day, you know?" His careful curation aims to create a timeline of the music scene, going back to the '60s. "It is truly fascinating to look at the changing nature of the economics, ticket prices, things that evolve."

The theme doesn't stop at decor. The Verb went headhunting at Berklee to build an artistically inclined staff. In the lobby, a vintage turntable waits with records handpicked by Bieber, inviting guests to soundtrack their own check-in experience. "It's another aspect of what this hotel is about—nostalgia, engagement," he says.

In the end, both Bieber and Brown maintain that the Verb will be what guests make of it. And they hope they make the most of it. "The intent is not to hard-sell people with a storyline," Bieber says. "There is nothing to it except to suggest that this was, this happened, this was a moment in time. You get to see the footprint; you get to see the kind of ragged edge from the notebook." / Alexandra Cavallo

RED BIRD LETS IT FLY

WINGING IT: Red Bird takes a gamble with its clam dishes.

THE RECENTLY OPENED RED BIRD IN Waltham mimics many restaurant trends, with a made-from-scratch emphasis and a seasonal menu. But there's one area where chef/owner Dan Stokes flies in the face of convention. Rather than using whole-belly clams, he's serving Ipswich clam strips. "It's controversial," Stokes acknowledges, but it's hard to quibble when they're served with coriander aioli and flash-fried herbs.

Less controversial is the impressive array of homemade delights. Housemade ricotta (using Hadley-based Maple Line Farm milk) is stuffed into the lobster ravioli. Handcrafted sausage (using Savenor's meats) is featured in the bucatini with rapini and "burst tomatoes." And all the ice creams and sorbets are created from scratch by pastry chef Adrian Vasquez. The seasonal menu currently includes starters such as sticky pork ribs with chili-garlic sauce, entrees such as pan-seared black bass with summer succotash, pistou and citron blanc, and desserts such as dark-chocolate ganache with raspberry, meringue and graham-cracker ice cream.

Red Bird, located in the former Tuscan Grill space, is open for dinner every night except Monday and has a full liquor license. Stokes says: "We would love to [eventually] serve lunch, but we'll introduce a weekend brunch first."

BERRY GOOD: Juni... features Eastern Mediterranean fare.

JUMPIN' JUNIPER

JUNIPER, DAVE BECKER'S NEW Wellesley restaurant, started off as a hot spot, literally and figuratively: Opening night was crowded, and the air conditioning was a late arrival after threatening to be a no-show.

"My Achilles' heel is the actual functioning of appliances and computers," Becker says with a smile. Fortunately, his strength shows in three more important areas: staffing ("I'm trying to become a talent scout"), decor (his grandfather's art is on the walls) and, of course, the food, which is Eastern Mediterranean, with Becker's touch. Quinoa falafel, anyone?

ROOTS OF SUCCESS

MOTHER JUICE TURNS THE FRUITS OF ITS LABOR INTO A NEW BRICK-AND-MORTAR SPOT.

IT'S BEEN THREE YEARS SINCE FOOD TRUCKS HIT the streets in Boston, and the fear that they'd cannibalize business from brick-and-mortar eateries has proven folly. In fact, for many operators, a truck is a step on the road to a restaurant. The latest example is Mother Juice, slated to open a storefront in Kendall Square this month—a move that was always part of the plan.

"In the back of our minds, the idea was always to move to a brick-and-mortar. We just wanted to test the waters first with a truck and see what the demand was like," says partner Ellen Fitzgerald, who started the Mother Juice food truck with Laura Baldini in April 2013. "We got a great response, so we started looking for storefront spaces."

The space they found is small at 700 square feet, but will do the trick, with seating for up to 13 at three white tables and four counter seats, plus outdoor seating in the courtyard across the way. The vibe is minimalist, with a few well-placed plants, counters made with reclaimed wood from New England barns and works from local artists, including a mural of an "emblem of fruits and vegetables."

Those fruits and veggies will also be all over the menu. Juice junkies can expect a new flavor that Fitzgerald says is "sweet and heat," made with beet, carrot, celery, jalapeno and pineapple. In addition to truck standbys such as vegan smoothies and cold-pressed juices, there will be salads with homemade dressing, cauliflower couscous, zucchini and squash noodles and breakfast items such as an acai bowl with hemp granola and fruit.

"The idea is to keep the supply chain the same, but just offer it in different ways," Fitzgerald says.

The roots of Mother Juice trace back to that supply chain. A couple of years ago, Fitzgerald mused about juicing fresh produce right at the farmers market in Davis Square. That idea led to the Kickstarter campaign, which led to the food truck, which led to the Kendall Square spot. Fitzgerald hopes Mother Juice will be another successful branch in a generation of restaurants that all share a similar origin story.

"There's been a lot of food trucks that have successfully moved into brick and mortar. It's sort of like, 'OK, they get their name out there. It's great marketing. They test their product. Then you have foothold,'" Fitzgerald says. "And I think it's really helpful for us, where we'd already run the business. We knew the operational side, and we just wanted to take it to a permanent location."

TIME TO PRODUCE: At its new restaurant, Mother Juice will offer an acai bowl as well as a spinach and arugula salad.

Q&A

FROM STAGE TO STOVE

KITCHEN CONFIDENTIAL: For more from Bonner, visit improper.com!

Being in a band and helming the kitchen of an upscale restaurant might seem like vastly different gigs. But for Andrew Banner, the transition came fairly naturally. The farmer bassist of Bostan emacare band Piebald is now the executive chef at Kendall sister establishments the Blue Raam and Belly wine bar, where he spends time making flavars sing. And while it's been almost five years since Piebald last played a shaw, he hasn't missed a beat. / Alexandra Cavalla

WHAT'S THE BIGGEST DIFFERENCE BETWEEN PLAYING IN A BAND AND BEING A CHEF? When you're on tour, you get to see something new every day. It's Mount Rushmore one day, a majestic pack of reindeer the next and two flat tires on your trailer the day after that. Of course, you get to deal with your fair share of disasters and new products on a daily basis in the kitchen, but the scenery doesn't change.

GROSSEST THING YOU EVER ATE ON THE ROAD? We toured with a band that had a very natural kind of "use everything" outlook on life. They would dumpster dive to find food and bring it back to the venue to cook for their dinner. They always asked me if I was hungry, and I always said no. One day, one of them showed me a frozen burrito, still in its plastic, and asked if I wanted to split it with him. I figured if I was ever going to extend the olive branch, that was the time.

WHAT'S THE MOST ROCK STAR THING YOU'VE EVER DONE AS A CHEF? I would have to say porróning txakoli from the second-floor balcony to our patio in front of our Txakoli Fest crowd.

WHAT DO YOU LISTEN TO IN THE KITCHEN? I listen to the "yacht rock" stations on Spotify at work. I like me some smooth music. The Doobie Brothers, Steely Dan, Michael McDonald and the Eagles. It helps to calm my mind.

ONE SONG THAT SUMS UP YOUR CULINARY STYLE? "Fitted Shirt" by Spoon. Every note, sound and instrument in the song sounds like it's in exactly the right place. They all fit together in a complementary way to make a song that is clean yet gritty, modern yet nostalgic. And when it's over, you want to listen to it again.

HOW ABOUT YOUR FAVORITE FOOD-RELATED SONG? Harry Nilsson's "Lime in the Coconut."

GIVEN YOUR TIME IN PIEBALD, I HAVE TO ASK: WHAT'S YOUR FAVORITE TYPE OF PIE? Oddly enough, my favorite pie would be cheesecake. I just can't get enough of the stuff.

THE NEW FOOD TRUCK? From Las Vegas to Somerville, shipping containers are finding second lives.

Inside-the-Box Thinking

Somerville's Assembly Row has received a very special delivery: four 20-foot shipping containers revamped by North Carolina's Boxman Studios to create SOMBLOX, a seasonal dining, art and retail destination slated to open this month. Two containers form Somerville Brewing Company's American Fresh Taproom, serving up Slumbrew favorites like Happy Sol, Lobstah Killah and, naturally, Assembly Row Pale Ale, along with a number of Somerville-sourced eats—say, a charcuterie board featuring Fiore di Nonno burrata and Taza chocolate—in an adjoining 60-seat beer garden. Two others will house an Artisan Studio and Villa, featuring rotating shows from the likes of DC Comics' Jack Purcell and Eli Epstein of Union Press, plus vending from local artisans.

"In Las Vegas, San Francisco, you name it—a lot of big cities have embraced these containers," says Russ Joyner, vice president and general manager of Federal Realty at Assembly Row. And the trend may be gaining ground here. Harvard Square is already home to Churn 2, which flash-freezes ice cream with liquid nitrogen in its cargo container on the Science Center Plaza. The Flash Forward Festival brought three containers turned photo galleries to the Greenway in May. And the Cambridge Redevelopment Authority has plans to pilot a market in a vacant lot on Third Street near Kendall Square next spring.

Touted as a means of bringing business to underused locations, such setups may entail lower entry costs—and greater possibilities for short-term leases and experimentation—than brick-and-mortar build-outs. In Assembly Row, SOMBLOX also offers an indie counterpoint to the mixed-use development's many chain outlets from big brands such as Nike and Saks Fifth Avenue. "We had a desire to make our newly opened property more available to local operators and mom-and-pops, and didn't have a vehicle to do so," Joyner says. "We think this is a way to celebrate what Somerville has to offer." / Jacqueline Houton

Good Eats: Count These Chickens

The menu doesn't mention it, but the chicken tfaya at Somerville's newly installed Moroccan Hospitality Restaurant is a dish built for two. Arriving nestled in a heap of savory couscous, the half chicken is so tender that a spoon can pull it apart. And the actual tfaya is the most splendid of garnishes: a generous helping of burnished, silky caramelized onions and plump raisins decorated with crunchy almonds. / Elizabeth Bomze

SWEETS 'N' SOUR

TO BOSTON DRIVERS: I'm a longtime bike commuter. Thank you for being so patient lately. When I wiped out today, I thought I'd need to run to the side and kiss my bike goodbye. Nope. The cars on the busy road all came to a dead stop, waited for me to grab my stuff in the middle of the road and made sure I was OK before driving off. It really made my day to know that there are so many drivers that are decent human beings (at least in Dorchester). Not everyone is an a--hole!

–Still spinning

TO THE MUFFIN MAN: On an early Friday morning, I bribed myself to go to work for another 13-hour day by promising myself a blueberry muffin from Flour Bakery. I dragged my cranky and irritated butt to Flour in hopes that a treat would make a long Friday a little less painful. A nice gentleman in front of me initiated some small talk in line, stating how everything looks so delicious and how difficult it is to choose something. Well, he conveniently ordered the last blueberry muffin. When it was my time to order, he overheard that his muffin was the last. He not only gave me his muffin without thinking twice, but also paid for it (and would not take no for an answer). After dealing with unruly and ungrateful people on a daily basis, he has reassured me that there are truly kindhearted people out there in such a crazy world. His one act of kindness brightened my day and my mood, and I hope he knows that I appreciate it more than he will ever know!

–Extremely grateful in Fort Point

DEAR C: Oh, I just got it. You don't want to continue dating me—you just want to continue having sex with me. Would've been good to know, say, a year ago. Have a wonderful day, sweetie!

–Sincerely, A.B.

OREGON, HAIL!

The advantages of Oregon's Willamette Valley in producing superb pinot noir grapes are easy to comprehend: temperatures are moderate during the growing season, the weather is dry and there are about 90 minutes more sun each day than in Northern California. Add in rocky hillside soils, low yields, an artisanal winemaking tradition and family ownership, and it's a formula for success with a notoriously difficult grape. / Sandy Block

SOTER VINEYARDS "NORTH VALLEY," WILLAMETTE VALLEY, 2012
Quite floral, with notes of cherry blossom and cinnamon, this wine from longtime pinot guru Tony Soter shows the concentration of an atypically ripe 2012 season. It's all about red berry fruit, silky textures and a lingering herb-like finish. $40, Whole Foods, Dedham

R. STUART "VIGNETTE," WILLAMETTE VALLEY, 2011
This charming, unfiltered pinot is quite savory on the palate, with cherry, red pepper, baking spice and tea-like flavors. Light and delicate, it's compatible with fish, salads and white meats. Serve this one a bit cooler. $30, Boston Wine Exchange, Boston

BETHEL HEIGHTS, WILLAMETTE VALLEY, 2011
This delicate pinot has a firm acidity with aromas of cooked cherries and earthy mushrooms, and it expresses hints of braised meat and leathery spice. It's ideal with a juicy breast of herb-rubbed chicken or a roast salmon. $30, Whole Foods, Dedham

ADELSHEIM, WILLAMETTE VALLEY, 2011
David Adelsheim is one of the last still-active pioneers of the Oregon pinot industry, and his wine remains a benchmark of the finely structured, tart but supple style. This vintage shows an abundance of vibrant raspberry-like fruit, with accents of game, leafy greens and exotic spice. $30, The Wine & Cheese Cask, Somerville

The three Lexington-bred audiophiles were fed up with the vinyl options: paying top dollar for top-quality sound or settling for a cheap player with a sound to match. LOVE ON ANOTHER PLANE

A MOTHER'S MEMOIR OF GRIEF AND GROWTH

The Angel in My Pocket: A Story of Love, Loss, and Life After Death* by Sukey Forbes
Published by Viking, 256 pages, $28
The author lives in Weston.

THIS MEMOIR'S AUTHOR IS A MEMBER OF THE pedigreed Forbes family, the old New England clan that famously summers off the coast of Cape Cod on Naushon, a 60,000-acre private island acquired in 1842 by railroad magnate John Murray Forbes. It's a family with some eccentricities—one Forbes was fond of sailing nude, and ghosts are said to haunt the island estate—but it's also one known to demand stoicism and Brahmin reserve. So when their 6-year-old daughter Charlotte dies from a rare genetic disorder, Sukey turns inward, feeling numb, while her Catholic husband, Michael, expresses his grief outwardly. She beautifully traces her deepening despair, which slowly breaks through her familial tendency toward repression while she contends with her two surviving children and a marriage suffering from the loss.

As Sukey unlaces her sorrow, she finds some solace in nature and in the words of an ancestor, the Transcendentalist Ralph Waldo Emerson, who also lost a child. Skeptically, she goes to a psychic, who correctly divines that Sukey carries an angel figurine she discovered in Charlotte's closet after she died, one she'd never seen before. During a guided meditation, Charlotte appears, happily saying: "Hi, Mummy!" And this spiritual epiphany grants a sense of relief that her daughter still exists in some gauzy Somewhere.

FROM PAGE 180: More than one time I found myself weeping through an entire flow class, a full hour with eyes closed, envisioning Charlotte. Sometimes in shavasana, the period of quiet rest at the end of each session, I could feel her lie on top of me and comfort me. It was as if the warm blanket of her soul would wrap me up and soothe me in those cherished moments of blurred floating between my world and hers. ◆

Traveler's Checks

Leave your French/English dictionary at home: Most service workers are bilingual.

There are no direct flights from Boston to Quebec City, and once you factor in layovers, driving may be your best bet.

Don't miss the National Museum of Fine Arts of Quebec, featuring works from prominent local artists, in the sprawling Battlefields Park (aka the Plains of Abraham).

OH, CANADA!

A EUROPEAN-STYLE ESCAPE, PRACTICALLY IN BOSTON'S BACKYARD

A LONG WEEKEND DOESN'T LEND ITSELF TO transatlantic travel—after hours spent squeezed into an airplane seat and queued up at customs, you'd barely get your bearings before having to turn back around. But behold, an answer to your quick-trip quandary: Quebec City, where you can find a taste of Europe not just on this continent, and not only in this time zone, but a mere six-hour drive away.

Once you set foot in North America's only fortified walled city, all the cobblestone streets seem to lead to the crown jewel of Quebec, the Fairmont Le Château Frontenac. Towering over the skyline, the hotel has been a top destination ever since it opened in 1893, hosting VIPs from Winston Churchill to Duchess Kate. The spires of its copper roof announce elegance at first sight—and the accommodations waiting within do not disappoint. Slide past the fellow tourists who congregate in the photo-worthy lobby and enjoy the other fruits of the $75 million renovation that was completed this year.

Some of the 611 rooms and suites have a classic continental design, others a more contemporary style, but all have modern touches (cue the rainfall shower heads). The most impressive amenities, however, may be the views of the St. Lawrence River and bustling Old Quebec. You can also drink in views of the city while swimming a few laps in the sixth floor's indoor pool, surrounded by floor-to-ceiling windows, or lounging on the adjoining terrace. And be sure to stop by the spa, which offers a variety of massages, facials and body wraps, as well as north-of-the-border specialties such as the elixir ice cider exfoliation.

Ice cider also happens to feature in one of chef Stéphane Modat's signature dishes at the hotel's Champlain Restaurant: the Chantecler chicken, a two-course feast of roasted breast with morel sauce and slow-cooked, mushroom-stuffed thigh. The Champlain's daily breakfast, meanwhile, follows the over-the-top style found in many European hotels, with enough fresh juices, cheeses and smoked fish to fuel you for a full day of walking through Quebec City.

The best plan for a day in Quebec is to have no set plan: Simply wander through the nearby car-free streets and surrender to your whims. Poke your head into the antique stores along St. Paul Street in the lower town, take selfies in front of the many murals and other works of public art, and play with the cannons still perched at the city walls—which may leave you wondering just how the French lost such a well-fortified hilltop spot to the British in 1759. You can find out, and learn how Quebec kept its French accent despite being colonized by Britain, with a visit to the Museum of Civilization, set right by the river. Afterward, snag a spot on the grass and watch the ships come into the port.

There is endless charm in this French-speaking city, and don't be alarmed if you soon forget what continent you're on, especially when you're dining. There's a bar or cafe every few feet, but the most bustling ones are in the Petit Champlain neighborhood. Crepes are a must, and an outdoor seat at the tiny Café Bistro du Cap is worth the wait. Balance savory and sweet with an apple and cheese crepe followed by the rhubarb version. For dinner, travel a few doors down to L'Échaudé for a mix of seasonal and French favorites in a modern bistro style—or, if you're celebrating a special occasion, break the bank with a trip to Saint-Amour, helmed by chef Jean-Luc Boulay, known for his impeccable sourcing. The cheese plate includes only fromage from Quebec, while the red deer and wild berries dish offers a taste of the great northern outdoors.

After a full day of walking and eating, you might be too taxed to wend your way back up to the hotel. Don't be a hero. Take the funicular, an outdoor elevator that will whisk you from the lower town to the upper for $3. You'll be dropped off at the boardwalk in front of the Fairmont Le Château Frontenac. A nightcap at the hotel's 1608 Wine & Cheese Bar awaits. Pinch yourself. Toto, you're not in Europe anymore. You never were, but it sure feels that way. ◆

CLOAK & DAZZLE

LA BRASA LIGHTS A FIRE UNDER EAST SOMERVILLE.

LA BRASA
124 Broadway, Somerville

DESPITE ITS PASSEL OF GREAT NEIGHBORHOOD eateries, East Somerville isn't on many food nerds' maps. Loaded with humble but worthy Latin joints, plus Ethiopian, Haitian, Sicilian-American and mid-century American, the stretch of Broadway trailing west of Sullivan Square draws few outsiders. Perhaps it's because the neighborhood has lacked an anchor restaurant of the very modern sort, the kind with a chef/owner trained in fine dining, creative and refined cookery centered on careful sourcing, a forsaking of hushed rooms and starchy service for the casual, lively atmosphere most customers now prefer, and a serious craft cocktail, wine and beer program. The new La Brasa plugs that gap convincingly.

Consider: Chef/owner Daniel Bojorquez and his investor partner Frank McClelland hail from L'Espalier. The menu is fashionably offal-centric, globetrotting and considerate to vegetables, with a range of plate sizes and the added frisson of kissing many ingredients with wood fire or smoke. The room is a sunny, wide-open, noisy space dominated by handsome uses of rustic reclaimed wood, with nary a white tablecloth in sight. The bar program by Matthew Schrage (ex-Hawthorne) boasts a craft cocktail list loaded with inventive originals, plus nerdily eclectic but budget-conscious wine and beer lists. That's practically the formula for destination dining in 2014.

The cocktail list leads with the tall, cool Red Duster Swizzle ($11) of gin, falernum and Campari over tiny ice pellets, like a boozy Sonic drink. Speaking in Tongues ($12) alchemically melds weirdness—strawberry-infused mezcal cordial, Abano amaro and citrus—into a complex wonder: smoky, bitter, tart and sweet. The draft Rosita ($10) drags the Negroni through Jalisco to fine effect, replacing gin with good tequila. The short, geeky beer list features $4 cans of workingman's lagers like Tecate, local brewery favorites like Jack's Abby Jabby Brau ($9) and several smoked beers, including the potent, pungent Mikkeller Rauch Geek Breakfast stout ($15), like coffee, bread and bacon in a bottle. Twenty wines ($36-$98), half available by the glass ($9-$12), lean Old World, especially Italian, but follow plenty of affordable, less-trodden byways. For example, the 2012 Palacios Sobrego Godello ($9/glass, $36/bottle), a crisp Galician white, pairs happily with raw Cape oysters ($3/each).

Dinner consists of snacks and generously sized vegetable, meat and seafood plates served rapid-fire; order in two or three rounds to avoid getting too many dishes served at once. Beet-pickled eggs ($2/each) are food-porn pretty but a trifle bland. Far more interesting are fried pigs' tails ($12) flanked by a vivid salsa of lemongrass and Thai chili: savory, piquant and crunchy. Swiss chard pie ($12) echoes the welcome trend of vegetables in rich, complex compositions, here as greens stuffed in pastry crust flanked by a soft-cooked egg, super-smoky country ham and vibrant piperade. Roasted carrots ($9) would be terrific by themselves in their smoky, charry caramelization, but when sauced with a complex, Puebla-style mole and dusted with sesame seeds, they're astonishing.

Tiradito ($14) barely marinates slabs of local fluke, ceviche-like, in aji amarillo vinaigrette, and nests them under a gorgeous halo of shaved fennel, with black garlic mustard lending a sharp, musky edge. Korean squid pancake ($17) folds tender squid into a giant, crisp crepe; a generous squiggle of gochuchang adds chili fire and a hint of sugar. Fried chicken ($17) builds a foundation of perfectly crisp-fried drumsticks into something swoony with an intriguing sauce of... what is that? That would be snail/brown butter vinaigrette with parsley and fresh horseradish: utterly original and fascinating. Braised lamb tongue ($10) is subtler, more about gentle, creamy textures than provocative flavors, braised to melting tenderness and pinkly perched atop a pile of fire-blackened, tart, sea-green sorrel stems. Stop the cart rolling through the dining room and snag a tableside-carved slice or two of Bojorquez's signature rib roast ($3.50/ounce), deep-flavored, fire-roasted beef that barely needs the accompanying zippy chimichurri. More smoke and impeccable technique define the barbecued beef brisket ($12), which spends most of a day parked in the smoker, then a low oven, and gets some color and acid from charred-tomatillo sauce—like Montreal smoked meat passed through the chef's native Sonoran sensibilities. It's an exquisite transformation of a difficult cut.

As at most Camberville indies of this ilk, service combines affable, well-versed enthusiasm for the menu with technical proficiency draped in T-shirts and jeans. As such, it stands in for La Brasa's sly underplaying as a whole: a chef turning out ravishing, vivid flavors in a funky barn of a space, located on a gritty, unprepossessing block in an overlooked corner of Boston's often-disrespected neighbor. That's a whole pile-up of underestimation that a few drinks and plates at La Brasa should quickly erase. ◆

PARKS AND REC

HIGHLIGHTS FROM HIGH SOCIETY

➜ Local toques served up some home cooking at Chefs Party for Our Park!, a benefit for the Armenian Heritage Park held at the Royal Sonesta Hotel. The 13 participating chefs created courses inspired by parents, grandparents and mentors for 300 guests, who raised more than $100,000 for the maintenance and care of the park, located on the Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy Greenway.

➜ A parking lot became a prime party spot when Morgan Memorial Goodwill Industries hosted its benefit The Good Party under a tent outside the charity's 1010 Harrison Ave. headquarters. Some 300 attendees enjoyed dancing, speeches and food from eight local restaurants, raising $250,000 to support the 11,000 people in Goodwill's job training and career services programs.

EIRE NOON

THE HUMOR'S AS BLACK AS A CASSOCK IN JOHN MICHAEL MCDONAGH'S MOVING DRAMA.

"I FIRST TASTED SEMEN WHEN I WAS 7 YEARS OLD."

Thus is the first of many quotable lines in Calvary, Irish writer/director John Michael McDonagh's second feature—one spoken off-screen in a brogue by an unseen man sitting opposite the Rev. James Lavelle inside a church confessional, high above the crashing waves in the fishing village of Easkey, in County Sligo, Ireland.

"It's certainly a startling opening line," the priest responds after a moment's thought, the camera holding tight on his bearded face, the orange in his tousled tresses and husky whiskers giving way to the whiteness of time. This is a priest who's heard a lot, and seen even more.

"Is that irony?" asks the voice on the other side of the booth.

"Sorry, let's start again," offers the Rev. James, played by the great Brendan Gleeson (Harry Potter's "Mad-Eye" Moody), a 59-year-old character actor who's now given his second outstanding star performance in a row for McDonagh. The filmmaker had previously cast him as the lead in his first film, 2011's The Guard, which found Gleeson playing Gerry Boyle, a small-town Irish police sergeant with a taste for prostitutes, little interest in upholding the law and a penchant for quick-witted wordplay that's just about the only thing these two characters share. Well, that, and a taste for the drink.

James, you see, is a recovering alcoholic. A good man, he came to the clergy late in life. Much humor is mined from the local townsfolk's reaction to the revelation that their priest has a daughter, Fiona (Kelly Reilly), who comes from London to visit her dad after a failed suicide attempt.

"But you're a priest," says Milo (Killian Scott), a bowtie-wearing young man who's never met a sexual fetish he hasn't explored in his quest to find love—or at least get laid.

"I was married before I became a priest," James explains to the small group gathered for a pint at the pub owned by Brendan Lynch (Pat Shortt), who mistakes Fiona for a prostitute. "My wife and I had a child," James continues. "My wife died, and I joined the priesthood."

"You can do that, can you?" Milo asks.

"It would appear so," adds Frank Harte (Game of Thrones' Aidan Gillen), the local doctor who takes one look at Fiona's bandaged wrists and says, "You made the classic error. You're supposed to cut down, not across."

In addition to Milo, Brendan and Frank, we're introduced to other members of James' flawed flock: Jack Brennan (Bridesmaids' Chris O'Dowd), the town butcher/cuckold; his battered wife, Veronica (Orla O'Rourke); her lover, anti-authoritarian mechanic Simon Asamoah (Isaach De Bankolé); Michael Fitzgerald (Dylan Moran), a depressed one-percenter whose wife and child have left him with his guns, horses, scotch and priceless works of art to piss on; and Inspector Gerry Stanton (Gary Lydon), a character who's appeared in both of McDonagh's features, as well as his 2000 short film, The Second Death.

Death, in fact, hovers over this film like a cloud—just as it did in 2008's In Bruges, a comic crime drama co-starring Gleeson.

Death, in fact, hovers over this film like a cloud—just as it did in 2008's In Bruges, a comic crime drama co-starring Gleeson that was written and directed by McDonagh's younger brother, playwright Martin. (Talent runs in the family.)

Any of the townsmen I've mentioned could have been inside the confessional on that Sunday at the film's outset, continuing his tale of being "raped by a priest when I was 7 years old. Every other day for five years. I bled a lot, as you can imagine. I bled a terrible amount."

"I don't know what to say to you. I have no answer for you," says James, a man incapable of the type of horrors that became far too commonplace within the clergy. "I'm sorry."

But this lost sheep isn't seeking absolution. He's interested in something else entirely: revenge.

"What'd be the point of killing the bastard?" he ponders. "There's no point in killing a bad priest. But killing a good one? That'd be a shock now. ... I'm going to kill you, Father. I'm going to kill you 'cause you're innocent. Not right now, though. I'll give you enough time to put your house in order. Make your peace with God. Sunday week, let's say. I'll meet you down on the beach there... Killing a priest on a Sunday," he laughs. "That'll be a good one."

And so, a clock begins ticking as a dead man walks, still tending to his flock, his trials mounting by the day. It's a classic American Western scenario, with the massive rocky outgrowths and damp green fields of Easkey standing in for the dry dust of Monument Valley.

"Your time is gone; you don't even fookin' realize it," Lynch barks at James in his bar, as tension mounts and tragedies pile.

It's not for nothing that the movie's called Calvary, even if it's easy to willfully misread McDonagh's title. Alas, there's no cavalry on the way; James steadfastly refuses to bring in the authorities or flee town. Like Gary Cooper's Marshal Kane in High Noon, James marches stoically toward his would-be killer, armed with nothing but his faith.

But no matter how this confrontation turns out, one thing is clear: Gleeson and McDonagh have the makings of a lasting moviemaking matchup, like John Wayne under John Ford's direction. Amen to that. ◆ plays the Middle East Downstairs on Aug. 14.

SUMMER OF SKA

LOCAL SKA HEROES CONVERGE FOR ANNUAL RUN BEHIND THEIR FIRST ALBUM SINCE 2000.

FEW PLACES SOUND LIKE A MORE enticing spot to hang out and play music than the shores of the Cape or Rhode Island on an August evening—unless, perhaps, you're used to living on the beach in Panama.

That's what Dan Vitale, frontman of Boston's venerable ska outfit Bim Skala Bim, has done for the past 12 years. He runs an eco resort and recording studio in Bocas del Toro. "It is a lot more laid-back here," Vitale says by email. "Unfortunately that means you never know if anyone will show up for things like work, rehearsals.... Though I really love it here, it is hard to get used to that part. But I can stare at the sea [and] swim in the sea every day, so it balances out."

He also tours at least twice a year with Bim Skala Bim, which hit Europe in April and is storming New England for its fifth summer in a row after a seven-year hiatus. Bim comes home to play the Middle East Downstairs on Aug. 14, spending the next two nights at the Beachcomber in Wellfleet and Hookfest in Portsmouth, N.H. The band also plays on Aug. 22 at Grumpy's in Falmouth, in addition to two dates in Rhode Island and two in Maine, capping its busiest recent annual run.

It's an extra-special occasion with the release of Chet's Last Call, recorded last summer at Wooly Mammoth Sound in Waltham—the group's first album since Krinkle in 2000. Bassist Mark Ferranti says he was doubtful going into the sessions but surprised by the results: an album that stands tall in Bim's catalog.

"But I can stare at the sea [and] swim in the sea every day, so it balances out."

"We had never gone into the studio so unprepared before, so that was definitely freaking me out," says Ferranti, one of a few Bim members who remain around Boston. Yet the group banged out 18 tracks in three days, starting on the Monday morning after a Sunday night show. "We got stuff down really fast," he says. "Probably 90 percent of it is the fact that we've been playing together for so long."

Formed in 1983, the group still revolves around the classic core lineup of singer Vitale, bassist Ferranti, trombonist Vinny Nobile, guitarist Jim Jones, keyboardist John Cameron, drummer Jim Arhelger and percussionist Rick Barry.

Just a step ahead of the Mighty Mighty Bosstones, Bim helped pioneer the third wave of ska in America after English "2 Tone" bands the English Beat, the Specials and the Selecter led the second wave at the dawn of the '80s. A precursor to reggae and rock steady, ska originated in Jamaica in the late '50s, but Ferranti recalls being a teenage reggae fan influenced by those English ska revivalists. "It was a natural extension of reggae, only it's faster, with a little more energy," he says. "It was a good place for a bass player, because there were interesting bass lines."

Of course one needn't be a bass player to feel the syncopated pull of ska. "It's easy to dance to, and it's not so serious, generally, though it can be," Ferranti says. "Those English Beat and Specials songs, for their political content, were unbeatable. [It was] a political message, but the music didn't come across as heavy-handed. It's like the people's music, which is also the roots of reggae."

Bim Skala Bim rolls its own breezy political subtext with "Everybody's Got Their Style," the lead track from Chet's Last Call that celebrates diversity. "We're all on this ball together," Ferranti says. "When it rains, it rains on everyone, and when it's a nice, sunny day, it's nice for everyone."

Cue that sun with the horn-laced bounce of "Summer of Ska." Trombonist Nobile and saxophonist Dave Butts recorded their lines on a portable studio setup in the Beachcomber dressing room. "I was about to cry," Ferranti says. "It was like the perfect theme music, ready for a movie or TV show."

Chet's Last Call takes its name from another club, a dive bar near the old Boston Garden where Bim played early gigs. "Some of our grandest memories are from playing Chet's," he says. "It was just a bizarre environment. Everyone was in it together." ◆

CABLE JUMPER

MY ATTEMPT TO ESCAPE THE CABLE COMPANY'S CLUTCHES

A YEAR AGO I CUT THE CORD FROM CABLE, joining the legions of people whose TVs are really oversized computer monitors. It was paradise, this land of Netflix and Hulu and Amazon Prime, and I coolly rebuffed the occasional entreaty from the cable company trying to woo me back. I was binge-watching Breaking Bad for $7.99 a month, and cable was just something old people used, like AOL addresses or those lighted magnifying glasses that let you read menus in dark restaurants.

There was just one problem: football season. Yes, I bought a digital antenna, which worked if I wanted to watch Fox on a clear windless day and I sat on just the right part of the couch during a harvest moon. But eventually I came to loathe the finicky antenna and sought ways to circumvent it, going to bars or inviting myself over to friends' houses. There's a subtle but important difference between hanging out and watching football for fun and doing it out of necessity because you're too cheap to pay for cable. I felt like an outcast, a live-sports-mooching leper. "We can't watch the Super Bowl at my house" is something no American male should ever have to say. It's in the Bill of Rights.

But I'd taken my stand against cable, and I couldn't stomach the defeat, the admission of wrongheadedness, that would come with the return of a cable box. Away, ye sirens, for you cannot coax the good ship Roku onto the rocky shoals of bundled TV!

Then my phone rang with a number from Minnesota. I don't know why I answered. I have no reason to expect any good tidings out of the Land of 10,000 Lakes. I don't know Prince. And yet I answered, soaking in that momentary pause of dead air that signals a computer handing you off to a telemarketer. It always takes a second, as if even the computer is surprised that you actually picked up.

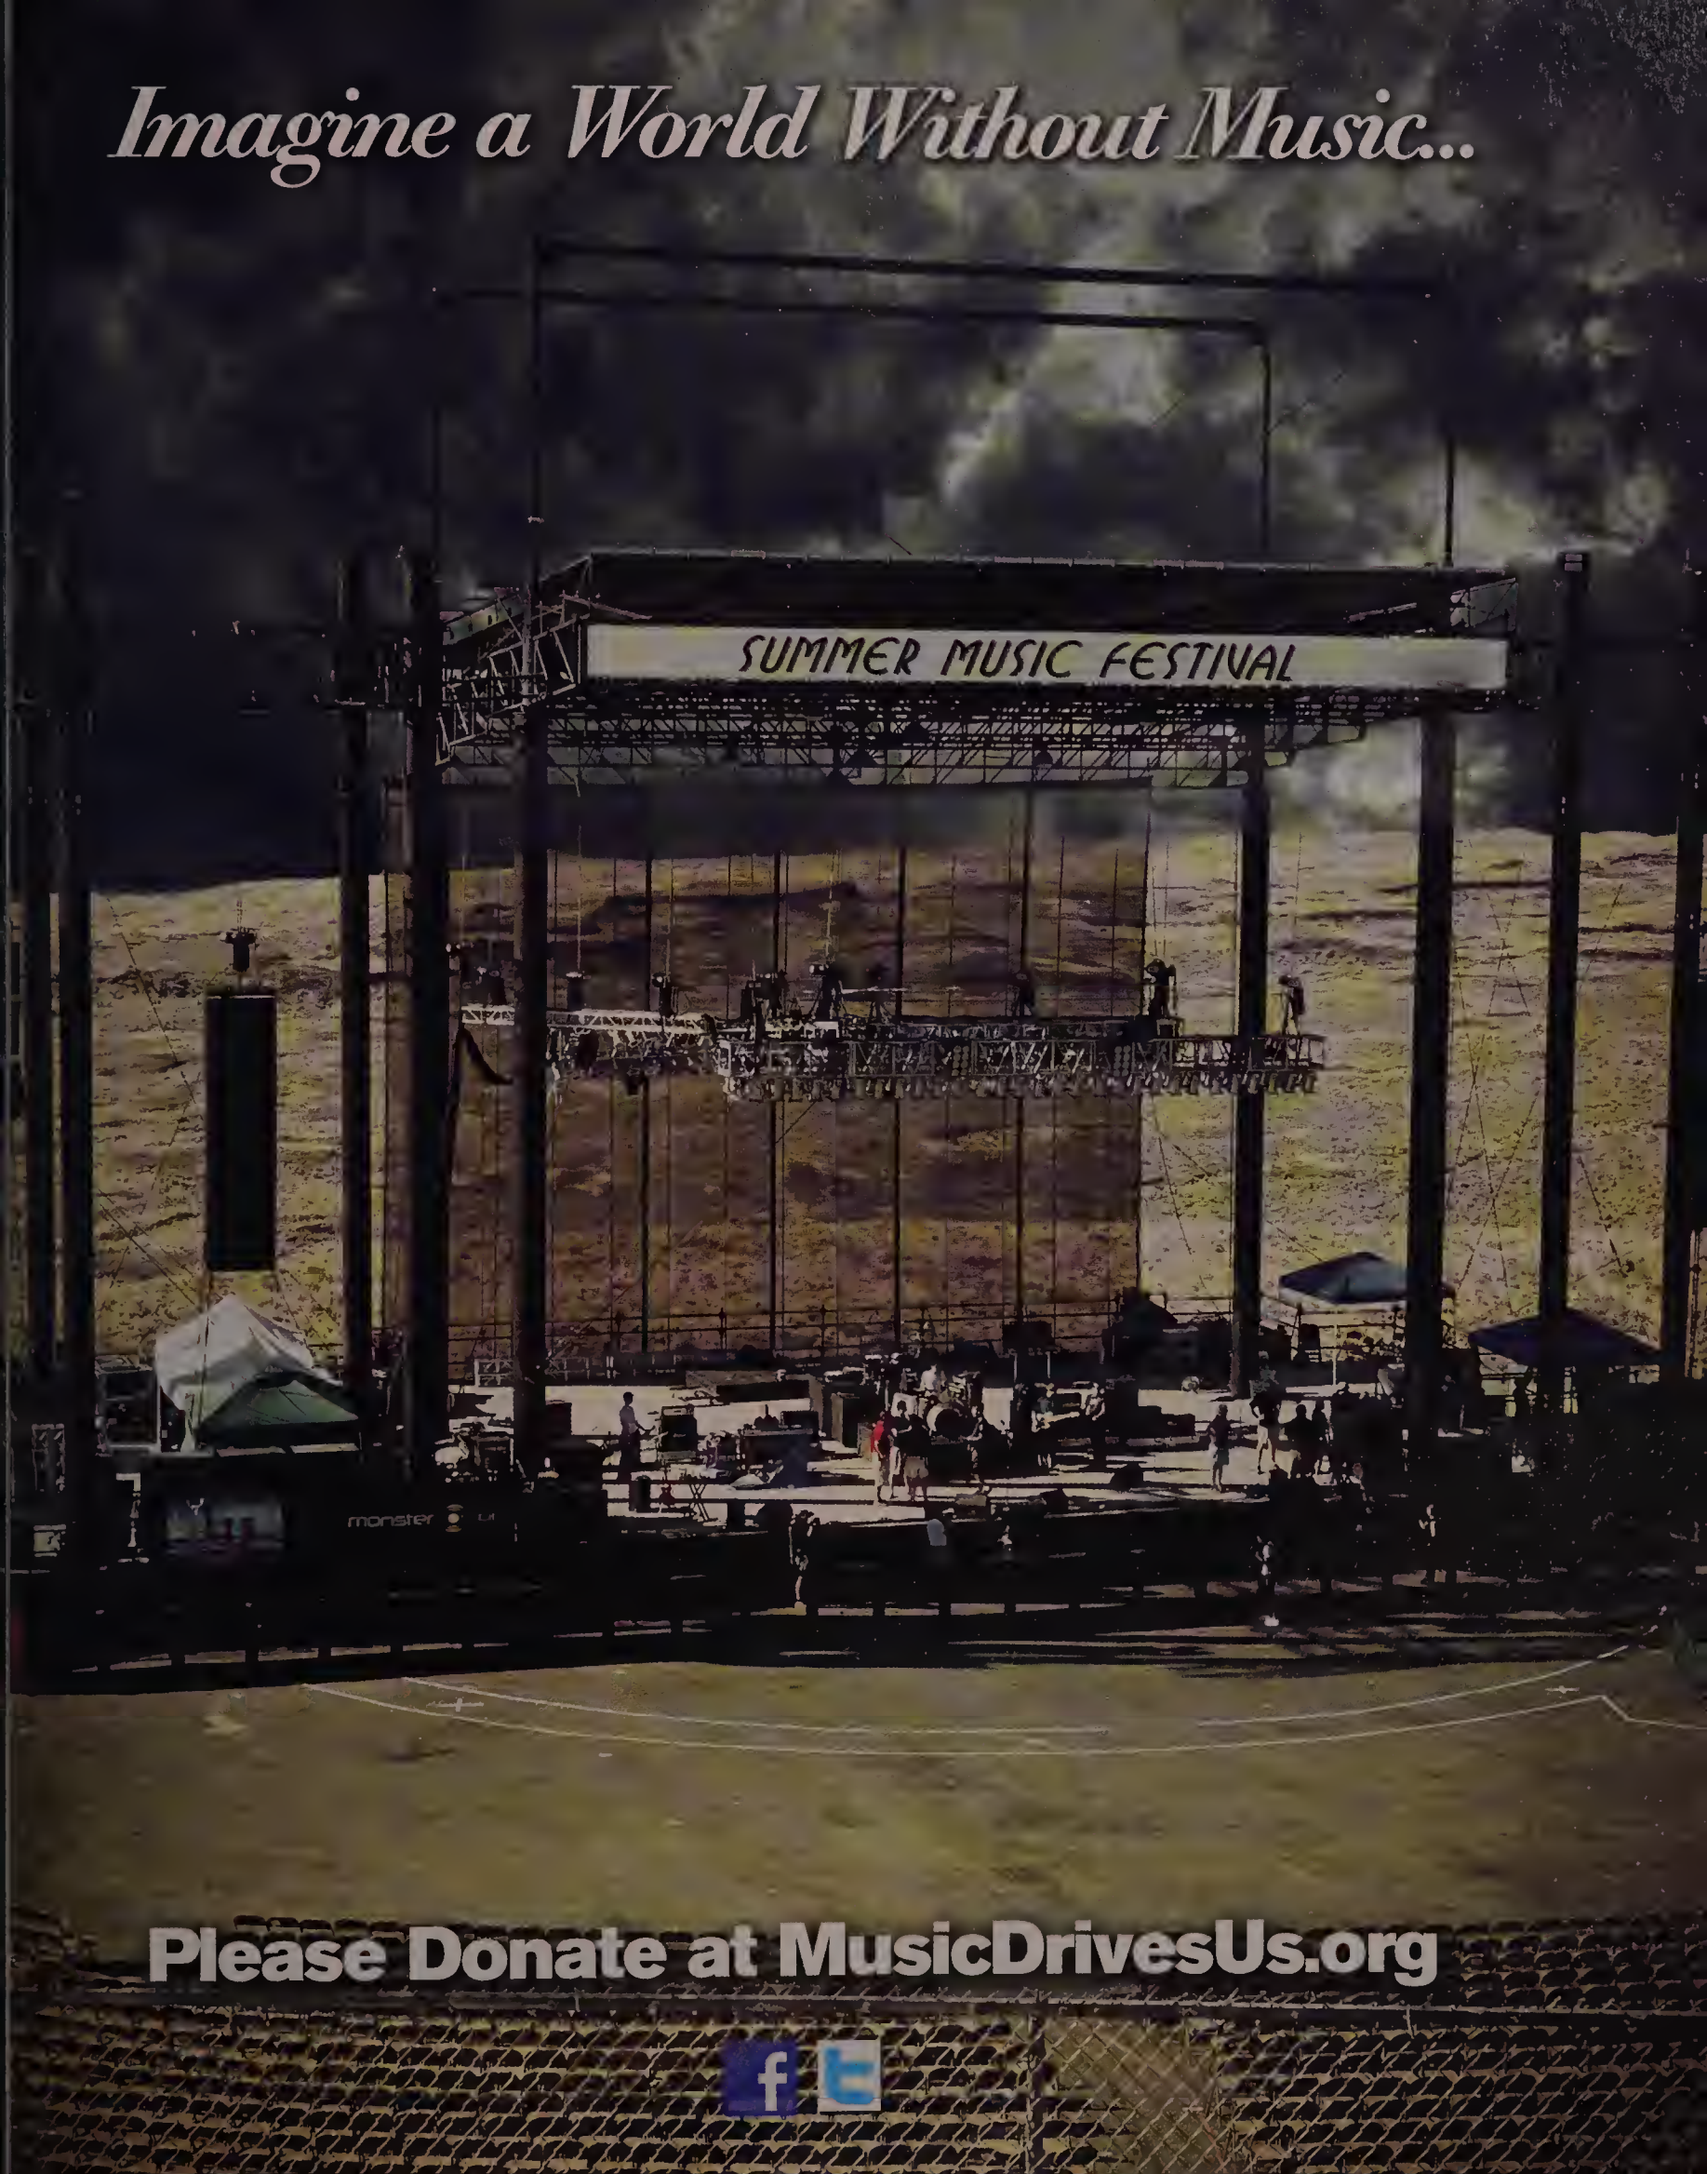
I know everyone loathes telemarketers, but I always let them get to a point far enough through their spiel where I can politely decline instead of just hanging up or screaming profanities. Look, whoever's on the other end of the phone surely didn't wake up in the morning bursting with enthusiasm over another day of fury and rejection. They're just grinding through that script so they can make the payments on a Mitsubishi Mirage, go home to microwave a burrito and take their Faded Glory jeans to the laundromat. They don't need me making their day even sadder by acting rude about how glorious my life is without their product.

So when this lady informed me that she was calling from the cable company, I didn't immediately interrupt her or hang up. I let her launch into her pitch while idly perusing Facebook and awaiting my chance to let her down easy. No, I don't need faster Internet. No, actually I'm all set. I'm all set with everything. If I had to write an epitaph for my own tombstone, it would read, "He was all set."

I'm not sure how she found her opening, but in a fit of hubris I might've bragged about how I have Roku and Netflix and need cable about as much as I need new tapes for my Walkman. She said, "What about broadcast TV, though?" I told her I had an antenna for that—I told you, all set, I win. She replied, "But the antenna doesn't always work that great, does it?" Right then I might've started crying. No, no it doesn't work that great. I miss... I miss Al Roker in the morning. What's happening in my neck of the woods? I have no idea! I've made a horrible mistake!

"Away, ye sirens, for you cannot coax the good ship Roku onto the rocky shoals of bundled TV!"

And there she was, the siren beckoning with a sultry offer. For $19.99 a month, I could watch football again. Just the broadcast channels, baby, nothing too crazy. Almost like not having cable at all, really. "Perfect picture, clear sound, without messing with the antenna," she said. No contract. No hookup fees. And then her tone of robotic persuasiveness changed for a moment, as if she were going off script and commiserating with a fellow human being's shared existential angst. "I have Roku too," she said. "But it's nice to flip through the channels and watch shows when they're actually on. It makes you feel connected."



A few minutes later, I agreed to get connected too. When Heather got home from work and I told her that the cable man was coming, she yelled, "Noooooo! We were free!"

I know. It's not about $20 a month. It's about admitting that they've got you and you can't escape and you're not that clever after all. That's the truth, as crystal clear as a Patriots game on CBS. Or the menu through my lighted magnifying glass. ◆

Think that's funny? Send unbiased emails to ezra@improper.com.

UNWELCOME VISITOR: Against my better judgment, I once again invited the cable guy into my home.

THE CHOREOGRAPHER CHATS ABOUT PEDICURES, POP STARS AND FEELING LIKE A SUPERHERO.

RENOWNED CHOREOGRAPHER MIA MICHAELS, 48, IS making her American Repertory Theater debut by choreographing its world-premiere production of Finding Neverland, playing through Sept. 28. Born and raised in Miami, she studied at the New World School of the Arts and attended summer sessions at Jacob's Pillow. She has worked with musical artists such as Celine Dion, Madonna, Ricky Martin and Prince, and she choreographed Cirque Du Soleil's world tour Delirium, as well as the film Rock of Ages. A three-time Emmy Award winner for her work on the television show So You Think You Can Dance, she is the founder and artistic director of the New York dance company RAW. In 2013, Variety named her one of its "most innovative women."

JONATHAN SOROFF: Favorite dance you ever did for So You Think You Can Dance?
MIA MICHAELS: I hate everything I do, so it's not a fair question. If I had to choose one...I can't, because I'm not a fan of my work.

If you're not a fan of your own work, does that mean you don't think you can dance? Well, I used to dance when I was younger. Dance is just what I do. It's what I've always done. It's very second nature to me. I have moments when I'm in love with it and moments when I'm wondering what I'm doing. I'm really hard on myself, which constantly pushes me to be better. I keep hoping that someday I'll get to that place, sometime before I die, where I feel like I've learned enough to be a brilliant creator. To me, I'm just OK.

What dance craze would you like to see revived: the Macarena, the Lambada? [Laughs] I think they need to bring back the Bump.

Are you a ballet fan? I was a bun-head! I grew up wanting to be a ballet dancer. But my ass was always too big, so I was never really built for it, and I was never able to go down that road. I started as a jazz dancer. Then I got really into ballet, but once I realized that my body was never really cut out for it, that's when I started choreographing. I thought, "If nobody wants me as a dancer, I'm going to create my own world of dance."

Fred Astaire or Gene Kelly? I have to choose? I would probably say Gene Kelly. The athleticism. He was way cuter. [Laughs] But they were both incredible. The finesse of Fred Astaire, you can't touch that. And yet Gene Kelly was such a guy's guy, too. I love both qualities, and I love that you asked that question, because I'm a big fan of old Hollywood.

What current pop star has the best moves? I have to say Beyoncé. She's unreal. As a performer, she kills it. She's in those heels, and she's dancing full out, singing full out...it's just amazing.

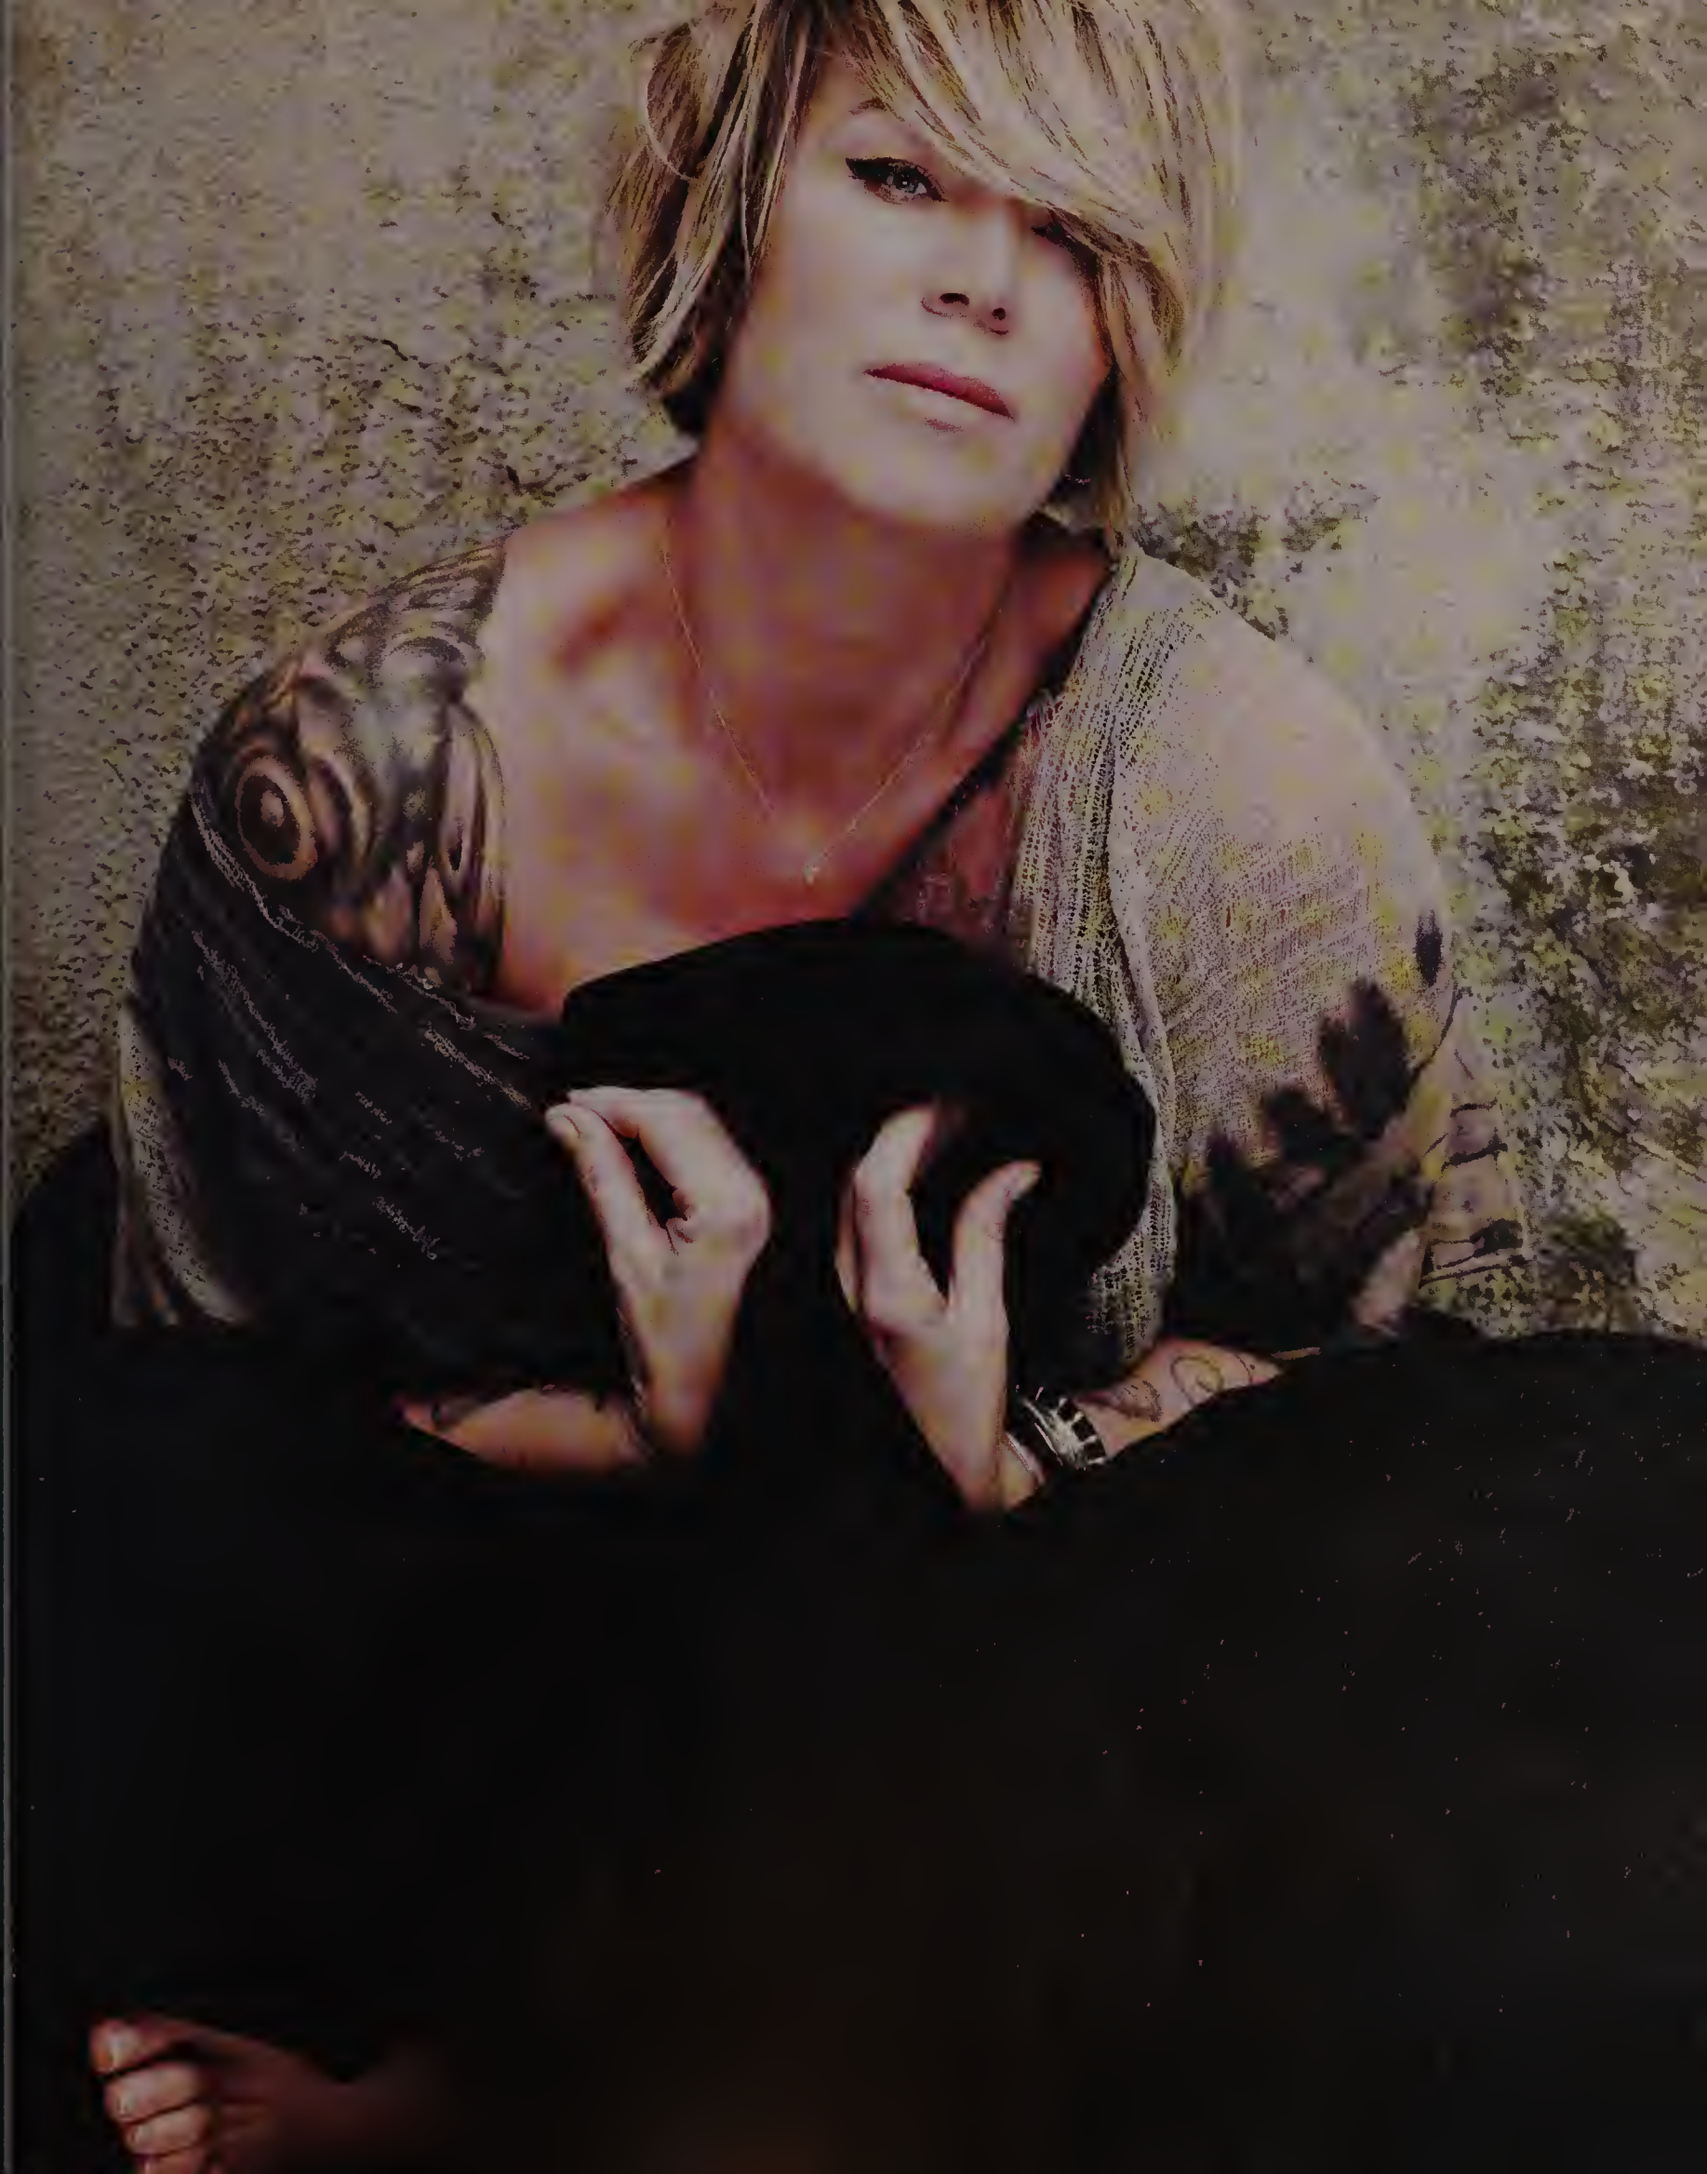
Is she the pop star you'd most like to work with? I'd love to work with her. But you know who else I'd love to work with? I would love to direct a tour for Rihanna. I think she's a darker, filthier, raw talent, and I love that. I'm very much attracted to that. I would love to create for her.

Are your feet just beat to hell, or do you take good care of them? My feet are beautiful. I'm very, very funny about my feet. I get a pedicure regularly. You'll never see my toes looking raunchy, and yet I've danced barefoot my whole life. Every two weeks, I have them done. I'm such a girl like that.

"I thought, 'If nobody wants me as a dancer, I'm going to create my own world of dance.'"

How is choreographing for the theater different than choreographing for a video or television? Theater—or at least this experience—is way faster. I thought television was fast. I don't know if it's because we're creating an original show, but time is so limited, and you've just gotta make it happen. For me, that's been the hardest thing, because I haven't been able to detail my work. It's more about broad strokes right now. Does the structure work? It's not just me choreographing a piece. It has to live within this larger world. It has to work for the story and for the whole show. It's a whole new beast.

Does the narrative dictate it? Absolutely. Everything is story-driven, and if it doesn't tell the story, no matter how pretty it is, it won't stay in the show. But finding that is awesome. I wouldn't want to be anywhere else. I'm learning and growing every day, being pushed, and I hope that my part in this helps to make the voice of Neverland really unique. That's my goal. I love this show.



If you could only do one dance form for the rest of your life, what would it be? Oh, gosh. You know what I'd love to do, because I don't really dance anymore? My body is so busted from years and years of doing what I do. I would love, love, love to find a really crunchy granola organic movement, like downtown New York, that I could take class in. I'm talking about hairy-armpit kind of dancing, all about breath and movement, that feels good in the body. Whereas what I do doesn't feel good in the body. What dancers like about it is they feel like a f---ing beast when they nail it. You feel so powerful and strong, like a superhero, if you can get through some of my work, because it's so physical. It's definitely a tough style. I could never do it now.

Is there a dance form you've never really mastered? Of course. You know what I would love to be able to study and do well? Latin ballroom. I think it's so hot.

Is there a dance form you're sick of? Contemporary. [Laughs] I'm sick of the same thing over and over. I hate it. It's so annoying. Everybody just rips off everybody else, and it's so overwrought. There's no individuality, and it's all so angst-ridden. They're all depressed or crying about something. Everybody just needs to stop. I just can't. And the funny thing is, I was one of the people bringing it to the forefront. But when I look at how overly dramatic it is, I'm like, "Come on." You can actually laugh and do contemporary movement. It doesn't always have to be depressing.

If life were a dance, what would it be? For me, it would be my choreography, because it tells my story. When I look at the work that I've done, good or bad, it's like a living, breathing diary. ◆

STREET SMARTS

HOW BOSTON'S LAKE STREET DIVE JUMPED FROM TINY CLUBS TO THE BIG TIME

BY Paul Robicheau

A DECADE AGO, they were New England Conservatory students playing an arty blend of jazz and country. Just a few years back, they could still be heard in small rooms like Club Passim and the Lizard Lounge. But everything's changed for the members of Lake Street Dive.

FIRST, a video of them singing a Jackson 5 cover on a Brighton sidewalk went viral. Then last September, T Bone Burnett tapped the band to join the likes of Patti Smith, Jack White and Marcus Mumford for a New York concert that aired on Showtime, celebrating the music of Inside Llewyn Davis. And with their February release, Bad Self Portraits, Lake Street Dive seized the national spotlight, hobnobbing with David Letterman and Stephen Colbert on late-night TV and finding themselves dubbed "The Year's Best New Band" on the cover of Rolling Stone. This summer, the quartet has been rolling through major festivals, from Bonnaroo to Newport Folk, on the way to a Sept. 7 homecoming at Boston Calling on City Hall Plaza. As David Byrne once sang, how did I get here?

"If we were asked to repeat the last 10 years step by step and have the same results, I don't know if that would be possible," says trumpeter/guitarist Mike "McDuck" Olson, attributing his group's seemingly overnight breakthrough to "good luck and happy accidents and falling ass-backward into success."

"It did happen sort of quickly, and in a way that we didn't realize was going to happen," adds lead singer Rachael Price. "At the same time, we see it as the positive result of 10 years of hard work." Those years included some lean times early on. "We didn't always have nonstop gigs, and we weren't able to support ourselves," Price recalls. "But we were really good friends. We really enjoyed playing with one another. So if we're in a bar with 10 people or in a sold-out 1,000-seater club, it doesn't make that much difference."

Upright bassist Bridget Kearney and drummer Mike Calabrese round out the tightknit foursome and contribute much of the songwriting. "There's something that's always going to be kind of exciting and attractive about a band that functions as four equal contributing members," Price says. "That's actually a little more rare than you'd think it would be. There's no leader, no one star."

" 'Why are we playing this weird jazz bullshit? Why don't we play songs like the Beatles? Why don't we play songs like Otis Redding?' "

Of course, as a frontwoman with a fetching, elastic alto who's drawn comparisons to Ella Fitzgerald and Etta James, Price commands the most attention. Olson adds that he, Kearney and Calabrese faced more limited prospects as professional jazz bandleaders than Price did as a singer. On the other hand, he says, "The point of this band from the beginning was to be a band where if you switched out one member, it couldn't be the band anymore. We aren't interchangeable parts. We're not Legos attached to the plastic bumps on Rachael's back."

Indeed, each member lends a signature element that's only magnified on stage, from Kearney's deftly slapped bass to Olson's trumpet filigrees to Calabrese's snappy backbeat, sometimes delivered with one hand on a shaker or a tambourine to his chest. Yet what likely most fuels Lake Street Dive's success as a four-way entity are the tonally distinct vocal harmonies sprayed behind Price's lead.

"Most of our rehearsing is spent doing background vocals," Price says. "We've done songs for six years, and we're still going back and saying, 'Is that the right place for you and your voice? Would that sound better if you put it higher or if you were lower?' We're constantly examining them and making sure they're punching and cooing in the right places."

Sometimes they draw from pop and soul masters. "We definitely have reference songs that we call on," she says. "We say, 'Well, let's listen to the background vocals on "Your Love Keeps Lifting Me Higher" ' and take something like that. We take a lot from the Beatles because their stuff was so rich with harmonies."

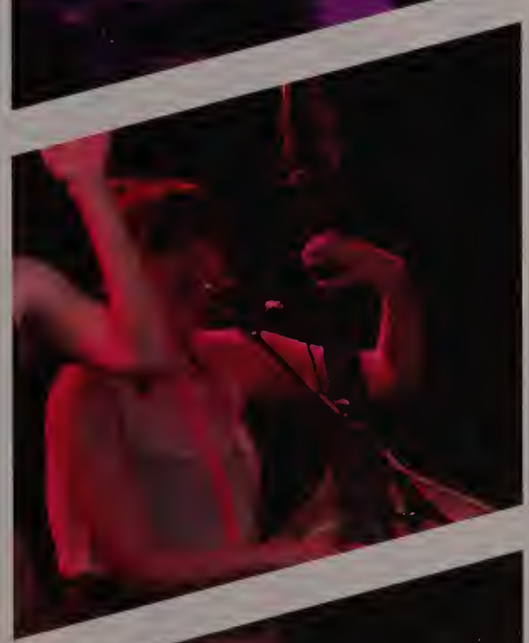
It's a musical palette that's evolved since Lake Street Dive's founding. "Our stuff was a lot weirder. It was a little avant-garde," Price says. But when band members compared notes, they realized the music they truly loved came from the classic pop and soul realm—Paul Simon, Sam Cooke and Motown. "It was us saying, 'Hey, this is what I like listening to,' and 'Hey, what do you know, me too!' " Olson recalls. " 'Why are we playing this weird jazz bullshit? Why don't we play songs like the Beatles? Why don't we play songs like Otis Redding?' " The shift in sound suited their moniker. "We called ourselves Lake Street Dive because we wanted to be the kind of band that could play in a dive bar," Price says of the name, coined after a bar-heavy street in Olson's Minneapolis hometown.

SOON the band moved from a focus on recast covers (including George Michael's "Faith," Hall & Oates' "Rich Girl" and the Jackson 5's "I Want You Back" on its 2012 EP Fun Machine) to shaping clean, retro-styled originals. The resulting Bad Self Portraits delivers sophisticated simplicity. Price coyly rides the doo-wop teases of the Kearney-penned title track—about a lonely woman with no one else to photograph—before the group erupts in wide-screen harmonies for "Stop Your Crying." The brisk "Bobby Tanqueray" lends a frisky '50s rock edge, while the soulful, swinging raveup "You Go Down Smooth" soars as the standout track.



The band recorded the album in late 2012 with Josh Ritter's keyboardist/producer Sam Kassirer at his Maine farmhouse studio, the Great North Sound Society. Ironically, it was during their time at that remote location that the video of their sidewalk take on "I Want You Back" exploded online. Someone shared it on Reddit and—in a surreal twist on six degrees of separation—even actor Kevin Bacon tweeted his love.

"We didn't have cellphone service or anything. And we checked the views on that video, and it had gone completely viral," Price says. "We were like, 'What's going on?!' " Much of the appeal of that video, filmed by their friend Greg Liszt (banjo ace for Crooked Still and the Deadly Gentlemen), comes from its stripped-down performance. The group vocalized around a single microphone, with Calabrese playing just a snare drum and cymbal alongside acoustic bass and trumpet.

"We refuse to rely on a lot of production to make a song," Olson says. "It's got to work with the barest of musical elements, because if that works, we can do essentially anything to it—and it'll be icing on the cake."

Lake Street Dive took a similarly intimate guerilla approach to its stunning rendition of "You Go Down Smooth" during September's Inside Llewyn Davis show at New York's Town Hall. "We were gaga at all the other musicians backstage," Olson says of what was an eye-opening experience for everyone, including national press like Rolling Stone and television talent bookers. "We left and told our friends, 'Oh, we met Elvis Costello, we met Joan Baez, oh my God.' It didn't occur to us until much later that there was an audience.... There were all these industry folks there. I'm actually kind of glad that we didn't realize!"

Since that Jackson 5 cover (now past two million hits) went viral, the band's profile has only grown on YouTube, where college a cappella groups have covered "You Go Down Smooth." Even a 1998 performance of a 12-year-old Price singing in Spain with her father's choir has drawn more than 65,000 views.

"It's kind of magical the way it's running now," Olson says. "I worry for the future if things become super economy-driven with the Internet and YouTube. This is something we've been thinking about and talking about a lot lately in the band, where everyone can post anything right now, which is truly a beautiful thing."

Everything has certainly clicked for Lake Street Dive, even with the release of Bad Self Portraits delayed because of a contract dispute with an investor for Price's prior venture as a jazz singer. "Fortunately, we got it worked out," she says. "It kinda ended up being positive in the end, because the year that we couldn't release the album, all we could do was tour nonstop. And it built our fan base in a way that once we could release the album, we were in a completely amazing place."

It's a long way from early rehearsals that felt more like parties ("There were a lot of chips being eaten," Olson says) and gigs in bars as tiny as Toad in Porter Square. Now the quartet is working new originals into its concerts and on course to make another album by early next year, amid greater expectations—and greater confidence.

"I'd be lying if I said we were immune to the pressure of the sophomore album, but we're trying not to think about that," says Olson, who still lives in Jamaica Plain, though his bandmates have relocated to New York. "We may have jazz roots and a healthy appreciation for various art musics, but nowadays we're concerned with things far more base than we were in the beginning. We just want to write hooks, man, and have people dance to the backbeat and go home singing the chorus. Not because it's a strictly commercial venture, but because that's what we want as music fans. We want to go to a show and remember the tunes." ◆

LOUD AND CLEAR

TEN TOP LOCAL ACTS WHO'VE BEEN MAKING NOISE AROUND BOSTON AND BEYOND

DUTCH REBELLE

LIKE EVERYBODY else in the control room of Cambridge's Bridge Sound and Stage, Dutch ReBelle has her head in a laptop, where she's organizing final tunes for her promising third project, ReBelle Diaries. But before the speakers boom with her latest hip-hop tracks, the rapper joins producer Janos "the Arcitype" Fulop and the others in swooning at the idea that Radiohead once rocked that room. »

"I don't ever want to be stuck in one genre," says ReBelle, who grew up listening to opera, dancehall reggae and No Doubt as well as the Fugees, Goodie Mob and Wu-Tang Clan. "With all my projects, I feel like there's gonna be a variety because that's who I am. That's what I mean by ReBelle Diaries. I used to rap over beats that made no sense with hip-hop, like Tina Turner shit."

That's evident in a polar-opposite pair of advance tracks from ReBelle Diaries heard in slick videos on YouTube. ReBelle ticks off relationship woes over a swelling neo-soul bounce in "Love Is," snapping syllables with melodic inflection to ice the phrase "I don't think we got much left for dis-cus-sion." And in the hard-edged "Yen," she breaks down the money game over a spooky, electronic pulse that wouldn't be out of place on a Radiohead record.

"For me to keep moving forward to the music I want to make, you need to know where I come from," says ReBelle, born Vanda Bernadeau in Haiti. She also raps about family dynamics, from her parents to a brother who lives in a tough part of Miami. "Some people think my music is aggressive or in your face, but to me, this is just what's around me."

That brother helped set her course when the poetry-minded ReBelle was still in elementary school, having her freestyle about household items as he'd point to them. "We never knew that it'd be anything serious, but that's the game we played," she says. "Being able to do it was what made me pursue hip-hop."

After graduating from Penn State with a journalism degree in 2009, ReBelle refocused on rapping, honing her skills at local and national showcases where crowds don't always expect a female MC to walk out. "That works in my favor," she says. "The flipside is [they're] super-critical. You'd better get it right within that first 30 seconds."

"STRUT" ANDALS FROM URBAN OUTFITTERS. ROMPER FROM CYNTHIA ROWLEY

TIGERMAN WOAH

PLAYING EVERYWHERE from labor rallies to rock clubs, Tigerman WOAH have become Boston's favorite rabble-rousers, blending blues, punk and Appalachian folk into foot-stomping revivals that champion the working class.

"It's all coming from the same place, a response to a repressive world," says frontman Adam Kaz, who howls like Tom Waits and whacks away at a painted banjo-ukelele. He and electric guitarist Jon Feinstorm migrated to Boston from Georgia, enamored with both early-century roots music and socialism.

Raised on politically charged punk in his teens, Kaz moved on to Pete Seeger and the Smithsonian Folkways series. "When Jonny and I got [Folkways], we lost our shit," he says. "That was a good two years where I didn't listen to anything but that, the Carter Family, Son House and Bukka White."

The underemployed friends moved to Lynn, where they fueled their interest in community-building—and building a band. Adopting a name that nods to a Rufus Thomas song, they drafted acoustic bassist Kevin Landry and eventual drummer Adam Lentine and played Lynn's tiny Buchanan Café. "It's like a 50-year-old fishing trailer," Kaz says. "It has kind of a bad history, but it's a great spot that's been reborn with neighborly people of all stripes."

They've since expanded their reach, even playing Boston Calling and local-band offshoot Boston Clawing at Ned Devine's on the same day. "I think I slept for two days after that," Kaz says. "It's rare that we play a packed bar, let alone a packed City Hall Plaza."

The band's been giving away the first two volumes of its Up South EP series and plans to start a third by fall. But people should experience Tigerman live to get the full WOAH, complete with ZZ Top-ish beards that Kaz claims were not a schemed shtick. "We never talked about it," he says. "They just got bigger because the four of us hung out all the time."

BENT SHAPES

BENT SHAPES

TO MANY, DIGITAL MUSIC distribution has made hard copies irrelevant—but singer/guitarist Ben Potrykus and drummer Andy Sadoway also see it as an opportunity for novel ideas. With their trio Girlfriends, they released songs on cassette and VHS tape, and under their new name, Bent Shapes, they just released a 7-inch on Plexiglass.

"It's thick and heavy and pretty pointy at the edges," Potrykus says of the single "86'd in '03" (a reference to his high-school graduation), backed with a cover of "Bridgeport Lathe" by obscure '70s Boston rockers the 2x4s. "When you have the physical component of a release," Sadoway adds, "why not have it a little wacky?"

In turn, Bent Shapes live up to their name with skewed, perky pop that falls somewhere between Vampire Weekend and Velvet Underground offspring the Feelies. The band adopted that name because "Girlfriends" was difficult to find in an Internet search and "forced people into preconceived notions of what they might expect," Potrykus says.

Another change: the departure of Girlfriends/Bent Shapes bassist Supriya Gunda, who left after last year's catchy Feels Weird. The group has since shuffled to fill that spot. Sadoway played bass on the new 7-inch, and, for shows, they recently switched from Spirit Kid mastermind Emeen Zarookian (who's moving to California) to Potrykus' sister Kate. Luke Brandfon has also joined the band on second guitar.

Nonetheless, Bent Shapes' tunes largely toggle on the metronomic, shifting interplay between principals Sadoway and Potrykus, who says, "The idea of using guitars as percussion instruments, interacting with drums, is pretty fascinating to me."

GEM CLUB

CHRISTOPHER BARNES survived what he calls a "traumatic experience"—having a crane hoist a piano into his Somerville apartment. "I think about when I have to move out," says the singer/songwriter/pianist of chamber-pop group Gem Club. But it was worth the effort, considering the growing national buzz since the January release of Gem Club's second album, In Roses. And that piano is where it all starts. "This is always sort of a jumping-off point, me and a piano, and then we figure out how to take it from there."

For In Roses, Barnes and his collaborators, cellist Kristen Drymala and vocalist Ieva Berberian, recorded at John Vanderslice's San Francisco studio, broadening their palette through synthesizers and samplers as well as strings arranged with the Magik*Magik Orchestra's Minna Choi. They've since taken drum machines and the synthesizers on tour, and Barnes says they're working on reducing the orchestral scores so they might employ small string sections at special shows.

But for now, Gem Club remains a trio, performing in concert halls and living rooms, rock clubs and art galleries. "Sometimes it's a hard sell to put us in a room on a Friday night that's really loud," Barnes says. "I can say that I enjoy playing for people rather than at people, and I have experience doing both."

Barnes' delicate, impressionistic ruminations are clearly made for a more intimate experience. In Roses includes "Soft Season," inspired by the life of fellow gay man Joey Stefano, a '90s porn star who fell victim to drug abuse. And "Polly" is about an aunt who died from Alzheimer's disease a decade ago, a time when Barnes says he was unable to grieve. "It all starts with personal experience," he says. "A lot of what my music is attempting to achieve is sort of an empathy."

PETTY MORALS

WHEN THE SIX WOMEN of Petty Morals first took the stage at the 2014 Rock 'n' Roll Rumble at T.T. the Bear's Place, it didn't take long to predict their deserving romp to the finals. They had delicious dance-punk chops, a joyous rock-'n'-roll attitude befitting a group that got its name from a quote by Keith Richards, and wicked catchy tunes, from originals like the breezy twister "Not Going Back" to a killer cover of the Pointer Sisters' "Neutron Dance." And of course, there's that girl-power thang, magnified through giddy smiles and show-specific fashion accessories, like Batman fight-scene bubble quotes pasted on each member. "Bam!" indeed.

"We're still silly girls," drummer Lauren Recchia says, "but we're also professional." She'd been around the Rumble block before, as had guitarist Chrissy Vaccaro and sparkplug singer Tai Heatley, in separate groups. Recchia had also played with bassist Chrissie Tierney in a Joan Jett cover band, and when her tastes turned to synth-punk, she sought "a party atmosphere" for her next project.

Recchia found that atmosphere with Petty Morals, though she admits, "It's really surreal that we all don't get into giant fights because we're all Type-A personalities." Their camaraderie was clear at the Rumble finals, where Petty Morals' onstage celebration at the night's end made it hard to tell that streamlined punk rockers Goddamn Draculas had edged out the ladies for the crown.

"We're a lot busier than we thought we were going to be after the Rumble," Recchia says, and with ex-Mellow Bravo ace Jess Collins poised to replace departing backup singer Helen McWilliams, the party keeps on rolling.

KRILL

IT'S NOT TYPICAL FOR A band's lyricist to picture himself as a tree, a blade of grass or a turd stuck circling the toilet bowl. But Krill isn't your typical band.

"The thing that drew me to philosophy was what drew me to Krill stuff," says bassist/singer Jonah Furman, who majored in philosophy at Johns Hopkins and dabbles in existential lyrics as abstract as his Jamaica Plain trio's art-punk.

For the song "Purity of Heart," from last year's Lucky Leaves, Krill lifted the title from Kierkegaard. The inspiration for the title of their February release, Steve Hears Pile in Malden and Bursts into Tears, is more esoteric. While there's no Steve in Krill, which also features guitarist Aaron Ratoff and drummer Ian Becker, the band's Illinois-bred members do admire the Boston band Pile.

"I get that it's ostentatious and people are drawn to it 'cause it's funny," Furman says of his conceptual whims. "Partly it's metaphysical stuff, like 'Lucky Leaves' is about [Krill's original drummer, Luke Pyenson] leaving the band, and 'Theme From Krill' is about being in the band Krill. It's stuff that I feel is not explored much in lyrics and kinda aims to take down this level of cool detachment."

The lyrics complement the raw, off-kilter dynamics of the music, which lurches with Furman's heavy ballast and Ratoff's gnashing riffs over the disciplined time changes of Becker, who leans into his cymbals and snaps off rolls of momentum.

"We're doing complicated stuff, but we're still pretty sloppy," Furman says with a note of pride. "We came up with our own thing in Somerville, then we went to Allston and got loud, and then we went to JP and got weird. That's the reductive narrative, but it's pretty true."

THE I WANT YOU

THE I WANT YOU TEETERS between control and chaos, its keen pop structures leavened by the loose feel of a band that jammed for three months before members decided they should probably play a gig.

"Our rule's been just to let it go and play," bassist/singer Jim Gerdeman says. "We let everyone do their thing or add their thing to it. There's no real controlling idea that we're trying to sound like or shared influences that we're trying to hit."

The I Want You's free-flowing chemistry stems from members' diverse influences and previous bands. Gerdeman grew up on classic rock like the Electric Light Orchestra and Cheap Trick. Guitarist/keyboardist Jonathan Donaldson came from the Color Forms as a fan of the Smiths and psychedelic pop. And guitarist Blake Girndt played songs about the TV series Lost in the Easthampton novelty band the Others. All three split lead vocals while Jonathan Ulman (Thalia Zedek) mans the drums.

Their new six-song EP, Ah Really, ranges from the playful snarl of "Off and On" to the Beatlesque "Queen Celeste." Gerdeman encouraged the quartet to record it in one day at Matthew Girard's Arlington studio after home recording sessions took too long.

"It made it more immediate," says Gerdeman, who spreads out the group's low-end textures on an eight-string bass he bought for $150 on Craigslist. "We've done projects where it's been very ironed out and polished off, and that's fine. But with this band, we're mostly trying to make it a good experience for us."

THE HOTELIER

PUNK ROCK OFTEN FITS the trope "three chords and the truth." But in the case of Christian Holden, singer/bassist of the Hotelier, the truth gets expounded upon. He lets emotions fly in torrents of lyrical introspection, and songs on his Worcester-based band's second album, Home, Like Noplace Is There, hover in the 300-word range.

"I wanted to experiment in writing a lot of words, to make it difficult for people to take our music on any sort of surface level," Holden says. "If you're at a show and you want to participate, you have to get into it in a really deep and personal way. And it worked, because people do come to our shows, and a lot of them know all the words and seem to have a really emotional and cathartic experience."

DOOM LOVER

Holden, guitarists Chris Hoffman and Ben Gauthier, and drummer Sam Frederick met as students at Shepherd Hill Regional High School in Dudley, originally taking the moniker the Hotel Year. They began touring in 2011, evolving from pop-punk, a style Holden deemed "kind of shallow," to more socio-politically conscious rock, influenced by emo bands the Promise Ring and the Get Up Kids.

Right from lead track "An Introduction to the Album," where the singer roars, "I can't seem to burn bright enough, I'm cold and I'm left alone," Home, Like Noplace Is There reflects on the disillusionment of suburban youth and the experiences of Holden and close friends, including a past girlfriend who was suffering from severe depression.

"I was aware enough of my experience to say it in a way that was clear to a certain extent, but it's nothing that was really damaging to me," he says of his songs. "In fact, a lot of the writing and recording and putting [the music] out was stuff that helped me get over it."

DOOM LOVER

THERE'S A LOT GOING ON at a Doom Lover show, starting with the divergent musical backgrounds its three singers bring to the stage. Jeffrey Vachon comes to Doom Lover from blues-rock ravers Big East, his fellow guitarist Geoff Smith hails from quieter shoegaze group De Osos, and synthesist Nikki Dessingue graced electro-pop outfits Stereo Telescope and the chaotic Campaign for Real-Time.

"It's like a basketball team—any of us can take a shot at any given time," says Vachon, who cites the Canadian collective Broken Social Scene as one band that all five members of Doom Lover enjoy. "I'm definitely the most rambunctious. Somebody has to be, and if it was all of us, that would be crazy!"

Indeed, the shaggy Vachon's the one most likely to flop about the stage. And if he bears a slight resemblance to Jim James of My Morning Jacket, Doom Lover also evokes that band's experimental streak. Case in point: Dessingue's use of a theremin.

"You can't deny the theremin," Vachon says of that antennae-based instrument, controlled by the proximity of hand movements and heard in songs like "Under the Alders" as sonic icing to driving rock. "You don't want it to be a shtick," he says. "We've got a spooky thing, but it's not 'The Monster Mash' all day."

Doom Lover even staged a puppet show in the middle of a vaudeville-themed February gig, and they have plans to try it again. "We like our shows to be more events than anything else," Vachon says. "I want to throw an interesting party."

PARLOUR BELLS

IT'S HARD TO IMAGINE a more perfect odd-couple pairing on the Boston rock scene than Parlour Bells co-founders Glenn di Benedetto and Nate Leavitt. "I probably bring the weirder side of things," says gangly, colorful frontman di Benedetto, adding of burly, bearded guitarist/producer Leavitt, "He sorta anchors me."

Leavitt, who also plays with soul-rockers OldJack and his own Nate Leavitt Band, met di Benedetto in junior high school in Andover. They started playing in bands, inspired by Guns N' Roses and the L.A. metal scene, then Nine Inch Nails and Jane's Addiction. "Things like that stuck with us, the flamboyance of glam-rock," says di Benedetto, whose persona nods to David Bowie and Jane's Perry Farrell.

Over four years, two EPs and three singles, Parlour Bells have slipped from self-described "dusky, darkly romantic lounge rock" to a harder-hitting attack with keyboardist Magen Tracy, bassist Brendan Boogie and drummer Paul Myers.

Next up is another EP, headed by new stage favorite "Celebrities on Ice," which di Benedetto links to "cryonics and time travel" as part of his desire for a futuristic reinvention of the group. "We've been doing the lounge thing and wearing the suit coats and the sparkly pants," says di Benedetto, an avowed science-fiction fan. "I'm going to make this like a space romance."

The singer's flair for visual drama also stems from his work in video production, evident in the "Bachelor Hours" video, which nabbed a 2013 Boston Music Award nomination and featured cameos from many local peers.

"That's characteristic of Boston," di Benedetto says of the scene's non-competitive nature. "There is something reassuring about the tight-knit community that we have. I think most of us are not under the delusion that we're going to be wealthy people. At this point, we love playing and having fun." ◆

Just Cos

Nerd alert.

Will Maisie Williams (aka Arya Stark from Game of Thrones) walk among us undetected at Boston Comic Con? (The young HBO star generated all sorts of Internet buzz after showing up incognito, hidden behind Spider-Man and Guy Fawkes masks, at the recent San Diego Comic-Con.) That's yet to be seen, but attendees will get to meet GoT's Jason Momoa (Drogo), who joins an eclectic bill of celebrity guests, like Sean Astin (of Lord of the Rings, The Goonies and FX's dark new vampire series, The Strain), James Marsters (Spike from Buffy) and, oddly enough, Run DMC's Daryl "DMC" McDaniels. There's also a packed schedule of events, including a comic art auction, live game shows, a costume parade, all manner of cosplay and panels and Q&As covering everything from My Little Pony to Star Wars to self-published indie comics. Prepare to geek out—and keep your eyes open for celebrities in disguise—Aug. 8-10 at the Seaport World Trade Center. / Alexandra Cavallo

BOSTON COMIC CON runs Aug. 8-10 at the Seaport World Trade Center, 200 Seaport Blvd., Boston. $20-$120. bostoncomiccon.com.

SKETCH ARTISTRY

Company One's Astro Boy and the God of Comics unfolds in Benjamin Button fashion, opening with the death of the title robo-boy superhero and culminating in the birth of his real-life creator, Japanese animator—and title deity—Osamu Tezuka. Through animation, live action, puppetry, live drawing and video and sound installations, the multimedia production traces the life of the manga pioneer and his best-known creation, Astro Boy, a nuclear-fueled but peace-loving android whose crime-fighting adventures were chronicled in wildly popular comic books and, later, Japan's first animated TV series, helping spread the anime aesthetic around the world. Catch the New England premiere—full of sci-fi action, high-tech touches, low-tech laughs and lots of heart—through Aug. 16 at the Boston Center for the Arts' Plaza Theatre. / Alexandra Cavallo.

SCREEN TEENS

Adolescence is a surprisingly young concept. Until the turn of the last century, you'd pretty much hopscotch straight from childhood into adult responsibilities. How that changed is the subject of Teenage, a documentary exploring the origins of the modern teenager through diary entries, old footage and other archival material dating from the late-19th to the mid-20th centuries. Featuring a soundtrack by indie rocker Bradford Cox of Deerhunter and narration by young actors, including Jena Malone and Ben Whishaw, it's an enlightening look at how youth got wasted on the young. Get out all your angst when it screens on Aug. 7 as part of the Recent Raves repertory series at the Brattle Theatre. / Alexandra Cavallo

Reviews by Brett Michel

22 Jump Street ★★★ In Phil Lord and Christopher Miller's worthy sequel to their big-screen update of the TV show that launched Johnny Depp's career, Deputy Chief Hardy (Nick Offerman) dryly intones the following to officers Schmidt (Jonah Hill) and Jenko (Channing Tatum): "Ladies, nobody gave a s--t about the Jump Street reboot. Anyone with half a brain, myself included, thought it was destined to fail, spectacularly. But you got lucky. So now, this department has invested a lot of money to make sure Jump Street keeps going. We've doubled the budget, as if spending twice the money guaranteed twice the profit." This winking comedy, from the directors who also helmed the surprise smash The Lego Movie, is a sequel about sequels—and it nearly doubled the opening weekend gross of its predecessor. Sending the cops from high school to college to do "the same undercover student thing," the film also mercilessly skewers romantic dramas, as the partners decide to "investigate other people" in an "open investigation," with hilarious results. "Do the same thing as last time," Hardy advises. "Everyone's happy." Yes, even this critic. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Begin Again ★★★ This film's original title, Can a Song Save Your Life?, was probably a little too on-the-nose—even for a narrative as sincere, heartfelt and corny as Once writer/director John Carney's latest music-driven confection. So Begin Again he did with a new name for this New York-set charmer, which got lost in the shuffle when it premiered at last September's Toronto Film Festival. It took a while to arrive in multiplexes, but saving this small-scale toe-tapper for summer is a canny bit of counterprogramming. After all, while it shares some of the same shaggy-dog pleasures as Carney's 2006 crowd-pleaser, nothing blows up, no one gets shot and the only hero to show up on screen is Dan Mulligan, a fallen record-label co-founder. Sure, he's played by Mark Ruffalo—the Incredible Hulk himself—but Dan's the only one in need of saving. That is, until he drunkenly stumbles into an East Village club and hears lovelorn songwriter Greta (Keira Knightley, who can sing!) and recognizes the potential for mutual salvation—and Carney scores a hit once again. (At Kendall Square, Somerville and West Newton.)

Boyhood ★★★1/2 With his landmark trilogy—1995's Before Sunrise, 2004's Before Sunset and last year's Before Midnight—writer/director Richard Linklater has spent 18 years tracking the lives of two lovers (Julie Delpy and Ethan Hawke), checking in with them at nine-year intervals. With his latest extended-storytelling experiment, an epic chronicle of childhood's mundane moments filmed over 12 years, Linklater finds the poetry in growing up. When we meet Mason Evans Jr. (played by newcomer Ellar Coltrane from ages 6 to 18), he's a cute little moppet going about everyday kid stuff. But Linklater's not interested in an idyllic Norman Rockwell portrait. Mason's part of a fractured family, held together by his mom (Patricia Arquette, never better). Humorous signifiers act as time capsules, buried throughout the film to clue us into the year of the action. Some of these signposts are quite literal: By the end of W's second term, Mason Sr. (Hawke) has his son planting Obama signs on neighborhood lawns—while uprooting McCain posters. It's just one of life's little moments that makes this 2 hour and 46 minute film move so effortlessly fast. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Chef ★★★ This isn't a movie about Jon Favreau. Sure, he wrote, directed and starred in this comedy about a once-hot gourmet chef, Carl Casper, who's in a creative rut. After being called out by his critics, Casper begins serving up delectable Cuban sandwiches from a food truck, winning back favor from customers and critics alike by returning to his roots. Favreau's a filmmaker who impressed with the hit indies Swingers and Made, and then a couple of massive Iron Man movies, before making the joyless critical and commercial failure Cowboys & Aliens. But Chef is a small picture, a tasty concoction in which his simmering acting chops are brought to a boil by 10-year-old Emjay Anthony, who delightfully underplays Casper's son, Percy, as the two bond over the heat of the truck's grill on a cross-country trip. Is Favreau as thin-skinned as Casper, who gets into a very public social media spat with one of his earliest supporters? Who cares, when such big talents as Dustin Hoffman, John Leguizamo, Sofia Vergara, Oliver Platt, Scarlett Johansson and Robert Downey Jr. are along for the ride? (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Edge of Tomorrow ★★★★ Doug Liman's entertaining new science-fiction film easily could have become another high-concept, low-return failure like Jumper. Hell, look at that lame name: Edge of Tomorrow. The director should have trusted his original title: All You Need Is Kill, the same as the Hiroshi Sakurazaka novel on which it's based. But the title happens to be the only glaring flaw of this film following Maj. William Cage (Tom Cruise), who's essentially trapped within the plot of Groundhog Day—only now, déjà vu equals death. Unlike Bill Murray's Phil Connors, Cage almost always finds his endlessly repeating day concluding with him battling aliens and getting killed in inventively excruciating ways, a setup that mines nearly as many laughs as you'd find in Murray's classic comedy. Love Cruise or hate him (or simply find him couch-jumping crazy), the film offers something for everyone; fans will eat this up, while haters will delight as the actor dies in countless hilarious ways befitting the best of Wile E. Coyote and his encounters with Acme's finest anvils. Don't be surprised if you find yourself buying a ticket again after the movie is over. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Get on Up ★★★ Only in Hollywood can a white man become a primary chronicler of the African American experience. Nevertheless, director Tate Taylor displays the same deft hand in orchestrating a fine ensemble cast (including Nelsan Ellis, Viola Davis, Octavia Spencer, Craig Robinson and Dan Aykroyd) as he did in the surprise Oscar nominee The Help. His music-driven follow-up offers a nonlinear look at the life of "the Godfather of Soul," James Brown, as played by Chadwick Boseman. The screenplay does a decent job of distilling six decades of his career, bouncing from 1988 to 1968 to 1938 and back. The music is wonderful, and the film has an infectious energy that's missing in Jersey Boys, Clint Eastwood's oddly sterile musical biopic that lacks the one element that elevates Taylor's pic beyond the boilerplate: a Movie Star performance. After his terrific turn as Jackie Robinson in 42, and this iconic rendering of Brown (a role that easily could have lapsed into Eddie Murphy-like caricature), Boseman has portrayed two of the most influential black figures of the 20th century. He's a talent for the 21st. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Guardians of the Galaxy ★★ Risking the rage of fanboys everywhere, I find myself oddly detached from James Gunn's adaptation of this atypical Marvel Comics property. In the past, we've had Robert Downey Jr. to make his iron suit shine, and, by golly, that Chris Evans sure is keen as America's oldest Boy Scout—but they exist here, on planet Earth. Charming though Chris Pratt is in his first starring role, he's stuck in a space opera that will sell a lot of toys (and comic books) but test those with low tolerance for characters named Drax, Gamora, Groot or... Yondu Udonta? Pratt plays Peter Quill, or "Starlord," a case of arrested development—but then, he was abducted by aliens before hitting puberty. Twenty-six years later, he leads a band of intergalactic misfits as massive chunks of exposition hurtle past us. (Let's see, after they visit the planets Morag, Xander and Nova Prime, they'll travel to Nowhere, aka "the severed head of an ancient celestial being.") Despite genuinely funny performances from Pratt and Bradley Cooper (voicing a wisecracking, gun-toting raccoon), the film wears thin before succumbing to third-act Marvel bloat. Watch it make a fortune. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

How to Train Your Dragon 2 ★★★1/2 When How to Train Your Dragon hit theaters, DreamWorks Animation finally offered Disney/Pixar some legitimate competition—not only visually, but also with its level of storytelling and character sophistication. Sure, co-directors Dean DeBlois and Chris Sanders had fashioned a familiar story with their tale of Hiccup (voiced by Jay Baruchel), the scrawny Viking who bonds with the creature that's supposed to be his sworn enemy. Toothless, his cat-like dragon steed, shared DNA with the alien in DeBlois and Sanders' earlier success, Lilo & Stitch, which also featured a youth secretly fostering a lethal beast. And while it may have lacked the depth of Pixar's best, it was still a real beauty. Flying solo this time, DeBlois picks up five years after Hiccup and Toothless united man and monster in the Vikings' island community. The pair spend their days soaring through the skies and charting new territories, until they encounter the mysterious Dragon Rider—and a devastating new threat. While this gorgeously rendered sequel isn't as humorous as its predecessor, it's darker, richer and more mature—much like its older and wiser protagonist. (In the suburbs.)

Jersey Boys ★★1/2 While Clint Eastwood's latest directorial effort is a hit-or-miss affair, you might not want to miss hearing the hits of Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons, whose rise and fall (and rise again) is dramatized in a more realistic fashion than you might expect from a film version of a Broadway musical. This isn't one of those razzle-dazzle affairs where characters spontaneously burst into song and dance across the screen in a flurry of motion. Instead, the group's music is presented as live performances while they're touring, recording or appearing on American Bandstand or The Ed Sullivan Show. But while the Jersey boys might not sing any dialogue, they do address the audience directly from time to time. Does it work? Let's just say Eastwood's not exactly Martin Scorsese. So, it's unfortunate to see him introduce a local made man (Christopher Walken) early on; the mob aspects and other darker edges are fairly toothless. Group infighting, financial problems and domestic dramas pile up predictably, until you wish the Four Seasons would stop turning to speak to us and just sing. Still, your parents will love it. (In the suburbs.)

Land Ho! ★★★1/2 Martha Stephens wrote and directed the features Passenger Pigeons and Pilgrim Song, which you likely haven't heard of. Nevertheless, without those films under her belt, she wouldn't have discovered Southern spitfire Earl Lynn Nelson, a newcomer to the acting game who starred in both. Through some miracle (likely the hand of executive producer David Gordon Green), Stephens has been partnered with Aaron Katz, the talented writer/director behind little-seen indies Quiet City, Cold Weather and Dance Party, USA. It's a great mix. The two share writing and directing credits on this crowd pleaser about a pair of 60-something brothers-in-law—one widowed, one divorced—who rekindle their bond during a picturesque trip to Iceland. "Ex-brothers-in-law," corrects Colin (Australian Paul Eenhoorn, star of This Is Martin Bonner), after Mitch (Nelson) apologizes for "tricking" him into the trip. "That's a pretty lousy thing to do," Colin deadpans. "Driving through the country, staying at nice hotels, eating good food." Our odd couple also spend an evening clubbing with two young "tight-assed women," which is a compliment coming from Mitch, who's fond of calling people "turd." Delightful. (At Kendall Square.)

Maleficent ★★ After questionably rebooting Alice in Wonderland as a vehicle for Johnny Depp's Mad Hatter, Disney's at it again, needlessly revisiting Sleeping Beauty in live action from the perspective of Maleficent, who's given high-cheekboned life by Angelina Jolie. Continuing the violent tradition of Disney's live-action misfire The Lone Ranger, screenwriter Linda Woolverton spins a wheel around rape culture, as future king Stefan (Sharlto Copley) revisits the moors where he shared a childhood romance with Maleficent, then a young winged fairy. Returning to the older, lovesick girl, he essentially roofies her. Waking alone, she's horrified to discover that Stefan has clipped her wings. His daughter, Princess Aurora (Elle Fanning), is reduced to a supporting role, but a heavy still has to die, as all irredeemable Disney villains must. Ah, but it's not Maleficent. In this unsettling revision, she's a victim, and her trauma is palpable. Fun for the whole family! (In the suburbs.)

Transformers: Age of Extinction
★ Director Michael Bay places Dorchester's Mark Wahlberg in his second film in a row that finds him playing a Texan, which is improbable enough. But casting him as Cade Yeager, genius inventor? Yup, we're in Bay territory all right. Underlining this point, Nicola Peltz appears as Cade's 17-year-old jailbait daughter, and while Wahlberg chastises every character in the film for ogling her ass in a barely-there pair of short-shorts, clearly he should be taking it up with Bay, who never met an actress he didn't degrade. Ah, but Bay would have us believe he's also a master of irony, as when an elderly movie palace landlord (Richard Riehle), who's surrounded by discarded reels of 35 mm film, tells Cade, "The movies today suck! Sequels and remakes!" You see, this dour, digitally lensed fourth Transformers film doubles as the start of a second trilogy, one that finds truck-turned-robot Optimus Prime riding on the back of a fire-breathing Dinobot that gallops into China—because that's where the money is. And really, isn't that what this Transformadness is really all about? (At Boston Common, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

SOUL MAN Chadwick Boseman stars as the Godfather of Soul in James Brown biopic Get on Up.

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

HIT AND RUN Youngblood Hawke's debut hit single, "We Come Running," was about facing fears head-on—and the L.A.-based indie-pop outfit did just that when they swam with 30 14-foot tiger sharks while filming the song's music video, a feat undertaken as part of the eco-minded quintet's efforts to promote shark conservation. They've since continued to make waves, releasing their first full-length album, Wake Up, performing on Jimmy Kimmel Live! and lending their catchy jams to national advertisements. Their sunny sound should appeal to fans of Passion Pit and Walk the Moon, so catch them on Aug. 6 when they come running to Brighton Music Hall. / Julianne McShane

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

TULLE OF THE TRADE

Izhar Patkin knows how to put poetry in motion. Each room in Veiled Threats, his maze of murals inked on fluttering tulle, is inspired by a poem by his late friend and collaborator, Agha Shahid Ali, a Kashmiri-American poet who tackled themes of loss and love, memory and exile. Created over a decade and never before shown in the States, the series forms the centerpiece of The Wandering Veil, a survey of the Israeli-born New Yorker's eclectic 30-year career. Take a peek at Patkin's gauzy new pieces—plus past work in aluminum, glass, wax, wire and more—at Mass MoCA through Sept. 1. / Susanna Yudkin PHOTO: GREGORY CHERIN

BOOKS & POETRY

A WOMAN'S WORK

A historical footnote turns into a sprawling saga in Kate Manning's My Notorious Life, inspired by the true story of Ann Trow Lohman, largely forgotten today but once dubbed the "wickedest woman in New York." Dickensian in detail, the novel follows a daring 19th-century midwife whose Lunar Tablets for Relief of Female Complaint draw patients from all social classes—and make her some influential enemies. Travel back in time on Aug. 13 at Porter Square Books. / Spencer Shannon

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granitc. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

The hat judges at the Rose Garden Party

IT'S HIS F---ING PARTY

The Mandarin Oriental was filled with heavy hitters when Red Sox slugger David Ortiz held his Dominican-themed gala for the David Ortiz Children's Fund.

The night began with cocktails and schmoozing among the likes of affable gazillionaire John Henry and the astonishingly beautiful Linda, the equally fetching Stacey Lucchino and her other half, Larry, homegrown gold medalist Aly Raisman, the fresh-from-Hollywood Eliza Dushku, broadcasting big shot Chris Collins and his stunning wife, Georgia, hockey legend Derek Sanderson, all-star chef Ming Tsai, lovable loudmouth Lenny Clarke, broadcasting babes Heidi Watney, Jenny Dell and Jamie Erdahl, Gucci sex bomb Jorge Rodriguez, rabid Red Sox fans Debbie and Bob First, brunette beauty Amy Belkin with her handsome other half, Jay Mofenson, rascally restaurateur Michael Conlon and his gem of a wife, Nicole, and one woman who responded to a compliment on her dress by saying, "I could barely get it zipped; it's gonna take a crowbar to get me out of it."

Cocktails were accompanied by delicious Dominican nibbles like pork empanadas, as well as the opportunity to watch sports artist Dana Farano paint an original work while the silent auction bidding went bananas. The entertainment during dinner, meanwhile, included Latin dancers, and the live auction garnered a lot of laughs, in addition to a boatload of money.

In short, it was like a quick trip to Punta Cana, except that, as one guest noted: "If we were in the D.R., I'd be on a golf course, not in a hotel ballroom."

AND NO, SHE'S NOT CANADIAN

To people who don't know her, few names elicit as much curiosity as Smoki Bacon's. To people who do, few names elicit as much fondness and admiration. That's why it was only fitting that the Boston Landmarks Orchestra honored the Boston doyenne at its annual gala, held at the Royal Sonesta Hotel.

A veritable Who's Who was on hand to fete her, among them: former Gov. Michael Dukakis, Olympic skating legend Tenley Albright, national treasure Teddy Cutler, Sherborn bluebloods Donna and Bob Storer, the comme il faut Karen Rotenberg squired by the distinguished Michael, raconteur Upton Bell, the gorgeous Joanna Datillo, Monsieur le Chevalier Marvin Gilmore, PR princess Rosanne Mercer, Billy Dee Williams lookalike Arnold Sapenter and his equally sexy other half, Joseph Reed, real estate mack daddy Arthur Winn, North Shore nabobs Appy and Susan Chandler, beloved Beacon Hillions Ann and Marvin Collier, Bacon's son-in-law, Chris Gabrieli, four of her absurdly accomplished grandchildren and numerous equally distinguished others.

Cocktails were served on the patio overlooking the Charles, and then everyone was ushered into the ballroom. Guests were encouraged to hold up masks of the honoree's face as she made her entrance, accompanied by an original work entitled "Fanfare for Smoki."

"There's a joke in there somewhere," someone said, sotto voce.

A delicious dinner was followed by dancing to the orchestra's brass section, and the dance floor stayed full long after dessert was cleared. The evening's most amusing remark came from the guest who said, "I'm half Russian and half English, which makes me 100 percent alcoholic."

JUDGE NOT

A robbery took place, right beneath the mayor's nose, at the annual Rose Garden Party, a benefit for Boston parks' arts, science and fitness programs held in the Fenway's Kelleher Rose Garden.

The otherwise flawless evening attracted the likes of Hizzoner Marty Walsh, Caribbean queen Colette Phillips, real estate magnate Maggie Ahearn, the soignée Melissa Flamburis, catering mogul Holly Safford, the bubbly blonde Connie Brown, twirling dervish Joshua Janson, one-woman fashion empire Sara Campbell, swanlike socialite Peggy Dray, the lovable, huggable Mary Hines, latter-day Louise Brooks Jane Roy, BSO babe Kim Noltemy and so on and so forth, most donning hats for a contest that was judged by yours truly, along with style mavens Elisha Daniels, Kathleen McDermott and Marie Galvin.

The roses never looked lovelier, the bubbly flowed like bubbly ought and everything went swimmingly—until the winners were announced and yours truly was, once again, denied the prize for best men's hat because being a judge rendered me ineligible. I'm pressing charges, just as soon as I finish licking my wounds. ◆

GAME ON

THE BOSTON AREA HAS SOME BRAGGING rights on football history. Back in the mid-19th century, the term "football" covered a motley range of games that could play out more like a chaotic mob scene than a sport. At Harvard, each year the aptly named "Bloody Monday" pitted freshmen against sophomores in a showdown with massive teams and few rules (and, presumably, much amusement on the part of upperclassmen). In 1860, the university banned the game outright, and a football was buried to commemorate its passing. But by 1862, youths playing on Boston Common had formed the Oneida Football Club, considered by many to be the country's first organized football club. They played what became known as the "Boston game," a hybrid of previous forms of play that looked more like the sport we know today. Before long, it took hold at Harvard, which hosted (and won) what some cite as the first intercollegiate football game in 1874.

We're still at the forefront of the game today, as Ezra Dyer suggests in his preview of the upcoming Patriots season, laying out seven reasons a trip to the Super Bowl may be in the cards. Elsewhere, Jonathan Soroff interviews our cover subject, Patriots defensive back Devin McCourty, who sounds off on being a twin and the trials of training camp. And lest you be experiencing Shark Week withdrawal, Soroff also takes a trip to Chatham to learn about the town's embrace of a different breed of summer tourist: the great whites that visit its waters. For an encounter with a less intimidating sea creature, turn to our Escape Artist column, where Andrew Rimas offers a taste of a Maine inn's epic lobster feast. Go New England, indeed.

A NEW PLATFORM AIMS TO GIVE MUSICIANS A LEG UP. »

Crowdfunding's New Beat

When Michael Doyle studied professional music at Berklee, his professors kept repeating the same refrain: You're not going to make any money doing this. "They were always talking about how the music industry was in this weird state of flux, and sort of dying," Doyle says. "That's what started me thinking, 'Wow, we have all this technology at our disposal, and the platform is just not there.'"

Enter Music Commons, a crowdfunding site founded by Doyle and fellow Berklee grads. Launching with a party at Church on Aug. 23, it's a sponsorship platform for fans, who can donate as much money as they want, for as long as they want, to help musicians build sustainable careers—without, as Doyle puts it, having to "sign it [their music] over to some dude in a suit."

The concept draws from crowdfunding sites like Kickstarter and Indiegogo, the latter of which Doyle and his co-founders used to raise money for the project. But he says theirs is a different kind of platform, one stressing fan interaction. "Musicians are way more than just the album that comes out at the end of the year, or the T-shirt you get. They are a story. People get all excited just to shake the hand of their favorite musician, right? What if, instead, you were telling your favorite musician a story, and then a week later they've written a song about it?"

Such video chat sessions are just one of the perks offered in exchange for fan sponsorship. They'll vary from musician to musician, but the Music Commons crew has some suggestions—early access to new music, tickets to shows, private shows streaming online. Basically, if artists can dream it, they can make it happen.

Twenty-three artists have signed on for the beta launch, an eclectic mix culled by Doyle and an on-the-street A&R team, who hit small clubs and pitched artists they dug. Going forward, though, the platform will be open to any musician who wants to join—regardless of talent.

"They don't have to be good," Doyle laughs. "But that's the point, too. You might meet someone on our site who is terrible, but for whatever reason they intrigue you.... You have little interactions with them, and eventually they get good, and then you do start giving them money. Then 10 years later, they're the next Bob Dylan, and you were that person who saw them when they were terrible and helped them get to that point."

In the end, he says, it's all about helping artists support themselves while doing what they love. "[I hope] 50 years from now, when someone asks, 'What do you want to be when you grow up, little guy?' and they say, 'I want to be a musician,' they'll go, 'That's a really stable job. You should do that.'" / Alexandra Cavallo

CONCORD, CONQUERED

HAPPY TRAILS: Dinner service at this popular cafe is just one of Concord's new developments.

UNTIL 80 THOREAU OPENED A FEW years ago, Concord seemed like the epitome of deep suburbia, at least when it came to fine-dining options. Now the sleepy 'burb is waking up to find itself the focus of several intriguing new projects, including dinner service at Trail's End Cafe and the forthcoming Woods Hill Table from filmmaker Kristin Canty (Farmageddon). The latter is "an incredibly ambitious project," says Ed Doyle, whose RealFood Consulting business has worked with all three of the Concord restaurants.

When it opens in late fall, the Peter Niemitz-designed Woods Hill Table will boast more than 150 seats, an oyster and charcuterie bar, a fireplace, a full liquor license, a private dining room, a huge open kitchen, a seasonal patio, live jazz at brunch and a menu "completely dictated by the bounty of the farm," Canty says. With the restaurant set to open in the former West Concord Supermarket, Canty saw the need for a lot of pasture-raised food, so she bought a farm in New Hampshire that will supply "60 percent of the meats and lots of the eggs" at the restaurant, whose kitchen will be led by Charlie Foster, former executive chef at Daniel Boulud's DBGB in New York.

Meanwhile, over at Trail's End Cafe, chef Stefano Zimei (who helped open Hamersley's and worked with Doyle at the Seaport Hotel) is cooking up what co-owner Elizabeth Akehurst-Moore describes as "carefully crafted comfort food." Akehurst-Moore, who owns the cafe with her parents, revamped the interior and doubled the size of the kitchen to expand beyond casual breakfast and lunch service into bistro-style dinner fare, such as PEI mussels with roasted tomato and saffron broth. "It started as a gastropub idea, but then I got sick of the term gastropub!" she quips.

MELTING HEARTS

SNAPPY PATTYS AIMS TO PLEASE WITH A SIMPLE APPROACH.

IT'S A WELL-TROD TROPE: THE UPSCALE NEW eatery that caters to yuppies and isolates a gentrifying neighborhood's longtime residents. But Nicholas Dowling, chef/co-owner of Snappy Pattys, which opened this month in Medford, is banking on the premise that "upscale" doesn't have to equal "pretentious."

"I've worked a lot of places where a customer doesn't know what a word on the menu is. They feel intimidated," Dowling says. "I hate all of that. I do not enjoy the pretentious air that comes with good food."

The Dorchester-bred Dowling freely admits that he could barely locate Medford on a map a year ago when he and co-owner Adam Gazzola first began scouting locations. But he's an unabashed fan now, pointing out rising property values and the planned Green Line extension. He's hoping that his first eatery will stand out amid High Street's hole-in-the-wall takeout joints and win over residents with its simplicity, something he's long wanted in a restaurant.

"The moment of clarity came in staff meals, and working with some of these servers who don't know certain things. And you realize, 'It's not them; it's me.' I've worked with so many chefs who don't get it. They want everyone to know everything. That's not ever going to happen," Dowling says. "If you want to do really nice food, great. Do really nice food. You don't have to be a dick about it. I want to keep doing really nice food that's fun."

For Dowling, fun means patty melt sliders, the signature at Snappy Pattys. The 1.5-ounce patties of grass-fed, hormone-free beef arrive three to an order ($6.25) on toasted house-baked bread. There are six varieties, from plain to Californian (topped with young cheddar cheese and a secret bacon sauce) to jalapeno (topped with nacho cheese and pico de gallo). The menu doesn't stop at sliders, however, as other fare such as white fish tacos, cherrywood-smoked lamb ribs and shrimp on the barbie are offered for dinner. The full-service bar serves barrel-aged cocktails, wine by the glass and an impressive variety of craft beers, including multiple selections from New England breweries Notch, Slumbrew and Foolproof.

The menu's unfussy theme carries over to the interior, with six tables for two and a couple dozen stools scattered at hightops, the bar and window counters. Large spray-painted portraits by a Lowell artist adorn the walls, while recessed lights dot the wood-beamed ceiling.

Dowling is confident the vibe will strike the right chord with locals: "Eventually all the people who might be gravitating to the older places here, they will come here and they'll enjoy it."

EVERETT UNCUT: Visit improper.com for the full interview!

Bridget Everett is a self-described "singer with tits for days." While that's accurate, it doesn't begin to capture the often raunchy but always entertaining act of this New York-based cabaret singer/comedian (who can be seen on Comedy Central's Inside Amy Schumer*). We caught up with Everett before her Aug. 27 show at Oberon. / Alexandra Cavallo*

HOW WOULD YOU DESCRIBE YOUR LIVE ACT? Sort of like a punk-rock cabaret, with an unhinged sexual bent. But with the voice of an angel. [Laughs]

YOUR STAGE WARDROBE IS VERY... RISQUÉ. My friend Larry Krone makes all my dresses. We call it the House of Larréon. The only clothes that I could find that would really fit me, and were good for performance, were on the big girl floor at Macy's.... I definitely embraced my body, and he wanted to do something that showcased it in a very Halston, '70s-esque way.

ANY MEMORABLE WARDROBE MALFUNCTIONS? Nightly. [Laughs] Early on, the way that I got into not being bothered by partial nudity is that I used to sing this song called "Can Hole," and I would sort of take my pants down and show a little bit of my butt. But one day my pants just fell off completely, and I just kept singing my song.... I went with it and I've been going with it ever since.

SO YOU'RE A CRUSADER FOR POSITIVE BODY IMAGE? Body positivity across the board. I feel comfortable in my own skin, and I definitely feel sexy and empowered on stage. And I hope that other people see that and get excited by that.

IF YOU COULD PERFORM WITH ANY PERFORMER YOU ADMIRE, LIVING OR DEAD, WHO WOULD IT BE? Freddie Mercury.

WHO COMES TO YOUR SHOWS? It started out pretty gay and queer-based. But now it's really everybody.... Just this past weekend there was a 70-year-old Chinese couple, and they were singing "What I Gotta Do to Get That Dick in My Mouth?"!

Drink of the Moment
FIGAWI

PRICE: $12

INGREDIENTS: Triple Eight blueberry vodka, simple syrup, fresh-squeezed lemon, mint

INVENTOR: Manager Eli Shapiro

FLAVOR: "Like a light, refreshing blueberry mojito, except it's vodka. It's a little sweet, a little sour; it goes down easy," Shapiro says. "I could probably drink about 11 of them before I start getting weird."

PAIR IT WITH: The Shellfish Platter ($45)—and the view. Admire the city skyline from the 32-seat roof-deck or take a seat at the down-stairs patio. Even when you're sitting with your back to the harbor, you can drink in the view from the mirror behind the bar.

GET IT WHILE IT'S HOT: For another proper summer send-off, try Shapiro's version of a Long Island Iced Tea: the Captain's Iced Coffee ($12). Or help break in Pier 6's new frozen drink machine by trying an Italian Ice ($13), with lemonade punched up by vodka and amaretto. We suggest heading there before the temperatures drop, but if you miss the boat, Shapiro is already working on the fall drink menu—the Charlestown restaurant is open year-round.

PHILOSOPHY: For Shapiro, who's worked at a dozen local bars, it's the little things that count: "I take care of people the way I would like to be taken care of when I go out. We have a bunch of regulars here. They all know my name, I know what they drink, and that's it." If you prefer your margarita served in a martini glass, and a bartender who remembers that, he's your guy. / Sarah Hagman

Along with one of the nicest patios in the South End, Merrill & Co. unveiled a roster of late-night grub earlier this summer. The menu choices rotate according to chef Jason Cheek's whims, but the Chicken + Waffle dish is a mainstay—and it's not the usual bird-and-breakfast combo. Rather, the kitchen heaps cheddar-dusted waffle-cut fries and a thimble of Old Bay aioli alongside two pieces of Cheek's take on fried chicken: tea-brined, seasoned with fresh thyme and lemon, and so craggy-crisp that it will audibly crunch when you eat the leftovers as a pre-sunrise snack. / Elizabeth Bomze

What's in Store

Newbury Street's JSD recently became the first Boston salon to land haute haircare line R+Co, the brainchild of three industry bigwigs—Bumble and bumble vet Howard McLaren, men's grooming guru Thom Priano and stylist to the stars Garren (one of those only-one-name-needed types). Free of parabens and sulfates, the line aims to address a host of hair needs with 23 products, from Death Valley dry shampoo to Dallas thickening conditioner to Rockaway salt spray. But JSD owner Jeffrey Dauksevich's favorite is the Aircraft pomade mousse. "It delivers a perfectly imperfect, messy, second-day texture that is magazine quality," says Dauksevich, who's picky about products, having designed his own Umi line a few years back. "If I had to work with just one product, this would be it." / Jacqueline Houton

MY ELEPHANT, MY BROTHER

A COMPELLING LOOK AT THE MINDS AND MALADIES OF OUR NON-HUMAN BRETHREN

Animal Madness* by Laurel Braitman
Published by Simon & Schuster, 384 pages, $28
The author earned her doctorate at MIT.

IMPELLED BY THE SUFFERINGS OF HER OWN troubled dog, Oliver—who jumped from a window four stories high and survived—Laurel Braitman set out to investigate the very human emotions of "non-human animals." In this resulting book, she shows how bears, elephants, seals and even pet rats can experience broken-heartedness from loss, called "separation anxiety" in colder diagnostic language. Animals can also demonstrate ADHD, depression and suicidal behavior. One "bipolar" bear named Gus swam anxious figure-eights 12 hours a day.

So, perhaps not surprisingly, animals are taking Prozac almost as much as humans. But Braitman explores other ways people are working to heal these highly social creatures, from therapeutic bonding to massage. Even the aggressive, hypersexual bonobo can be tamed in a kind of ape kindergarten, learning friendliness and manners. She also looks at the conditions causing such woes in zoos, circuses and other places of captivity, following cases like that of the gigantic mascot elephant Rara, chained in Thailand's Sheraton Hotel. Having never known her elephant mother, she finds the natural world alien when returned to the herd.

Braitman's vivid, often witty renderings—and open heart—make these animals into nearly novelistic characters. And their sensitivities are only a few zebra stripes away from our own.

FROM PAGE 248: "Lots of people believe that being with an elephant is a one-way relationship, that the elephant is to be controlled," Preecha told me. "But this is wrong. It should be a long-term relationship of love.... When mahouts and elephants worked together for a long time in the camps, you would see the elephants taking care of the men. Like carrying their mahout back to camp after he got too drunk to walk." ◆

You can see an eagle's view of Penobscot Bay from the top of Mount Battie. Drive up for a quick picnic, or hike the trails of the Camden Hills State Park and earn your snapshot.

MAINE ATTRACTION: Delights await in the seemingly sleepy harbor town of Camden.

SHELL GAMES

EXPLORATIONS IN LOBSTER AT THE CAMDEN HARBOUR INN

North of Portland, the coast of Maine is a line drawn by a jittery hand. It jerks suddenly east or south when its business should be an upward sweep toward Canada. These geographical spasms lend it a happy plenitude of nooks and coves, as well as islets sprayed like inkblots across Penobscot Bay. Land and sea clash in sudden peninsulas and headlands, and mountains jut at scenic points so you can take excellent selfies.

In summer, the slate coast assumes a coat of green velvet, and towns nestle in it like ivory buttons. Camden is the most polished of these. While the drive from Boston can be an intimidating haul, the first glimpse of Camden's harbor dispels any lingering misery you're trailing from the tarmac of I-95. Scooped from the foot of Mount Battie, Camden looks like a watercolor seascape framed with evergreens. From Main Street, a park unrolls to waters dense with schooners. A wooded island guards the harbor entrance, while chowder houses and patios crowd up against the shore. The town is a hothouse for art galleries and stores that smell like potpourri and sell artisanal corkscrews, and if the atmosphere isn't quite drowsy, it's on the cusp of a satisfied yawn.

There is, however, a powerful awakening in store if you walk down Bay View Street to a gracious white mansion on a hill—the Camden Harbour Inn. This is the town's Relais & Châteaux property, its finest lodging, home to the most innovative lobster tasting menu in Maine.

Every destination property in New England ought to have verandas overlooking water and flowers, and the Camden Harbour answers well. Stepping inside, the modernity of the design belies the Victorian exterior. You feel like you've wandered onto the set of a recent episode of House Hunters International. Lines are clean, the palette has a toothpaste brightness, and there's a Euro modernity to the furnishings. Indeed, the owners are Dutch. Lots of New England inns boast rooms with colonial names, but the ones here are from a different imperial memory: Surinam, Malacca, Curacao, New Amsterdam, Dutch Brazil. Instead of Rembrandt prints, many of the suites boast Asian touches, as well as sunken baths. The Taiwan suite, for instance, sports a statuette of a Mandarin on the mantel above the gas fireplace, while Siam has Buddha heads and lotuses.

But the inn would hardly merit a visit on account of its side tables. The reason to come here is Natalie's, the house restaurant helmed by engaged chefs Chris Long and Shelby Stevens. Designed to feel like a Left Bank bistro from the Belle Epoque, it's a room of red velvet, bright marble and golden light. The contents of the plates, however, are purest Maine, from the local oyster with smoked potato and crème fraiche to the tarragon cannelloni with rabbit confit and fiddleheads.

There are decent, God-fearing people who believe that the lobster's apotheosis happens with a rapid boil and a dip in a hot cup of Land o' Lakes. These people are morons, or at least, they haven't been to Natalie's. Here is proof, in five courses, that the purest raw ingredient can profit from a little judicious tweaking. Although the lobster tasting menu changes daily, on a summer evening it might begin with a piece of ivory meat on buttermilk panna cotta with cucumber, pancetta, chive and melon, all calculated for contrast, depth and balance. Next, a simple lobster consommé with fresh herbs and corn, followed by grilled claws in a miso glaze with local squash. The culminating tail appears on a plume of red pepper puree and salsa verde. Which is to say, this menu takes the common crustacean and opens up its world.

Desserts, too, play with local flavors in cheese, fruit and even pea shoots, but take particular note of the wine program. Micah Wells, the sommelier, has a genius for creative pairings and conversation. His enthusiasm for his subject isn't only contagious; it's an excellent reason to linger over a glass of fragrant yuzu wine after dinner.

As you toddle upstairs to your room, your senses satiated and fuzzy with the experience, you may feel a pang at leaving. Don't. Natalie's serves breakfast. ◆

URBANE RENEWAL

THE GLENVILLE STOPS OFFERS AN ANTIDOTE TO ALLSTON BRO BARS.

THE GLENVILLE STOPS
87 Glenville Ave., Allston (617-903-3638) glenvillestops.com

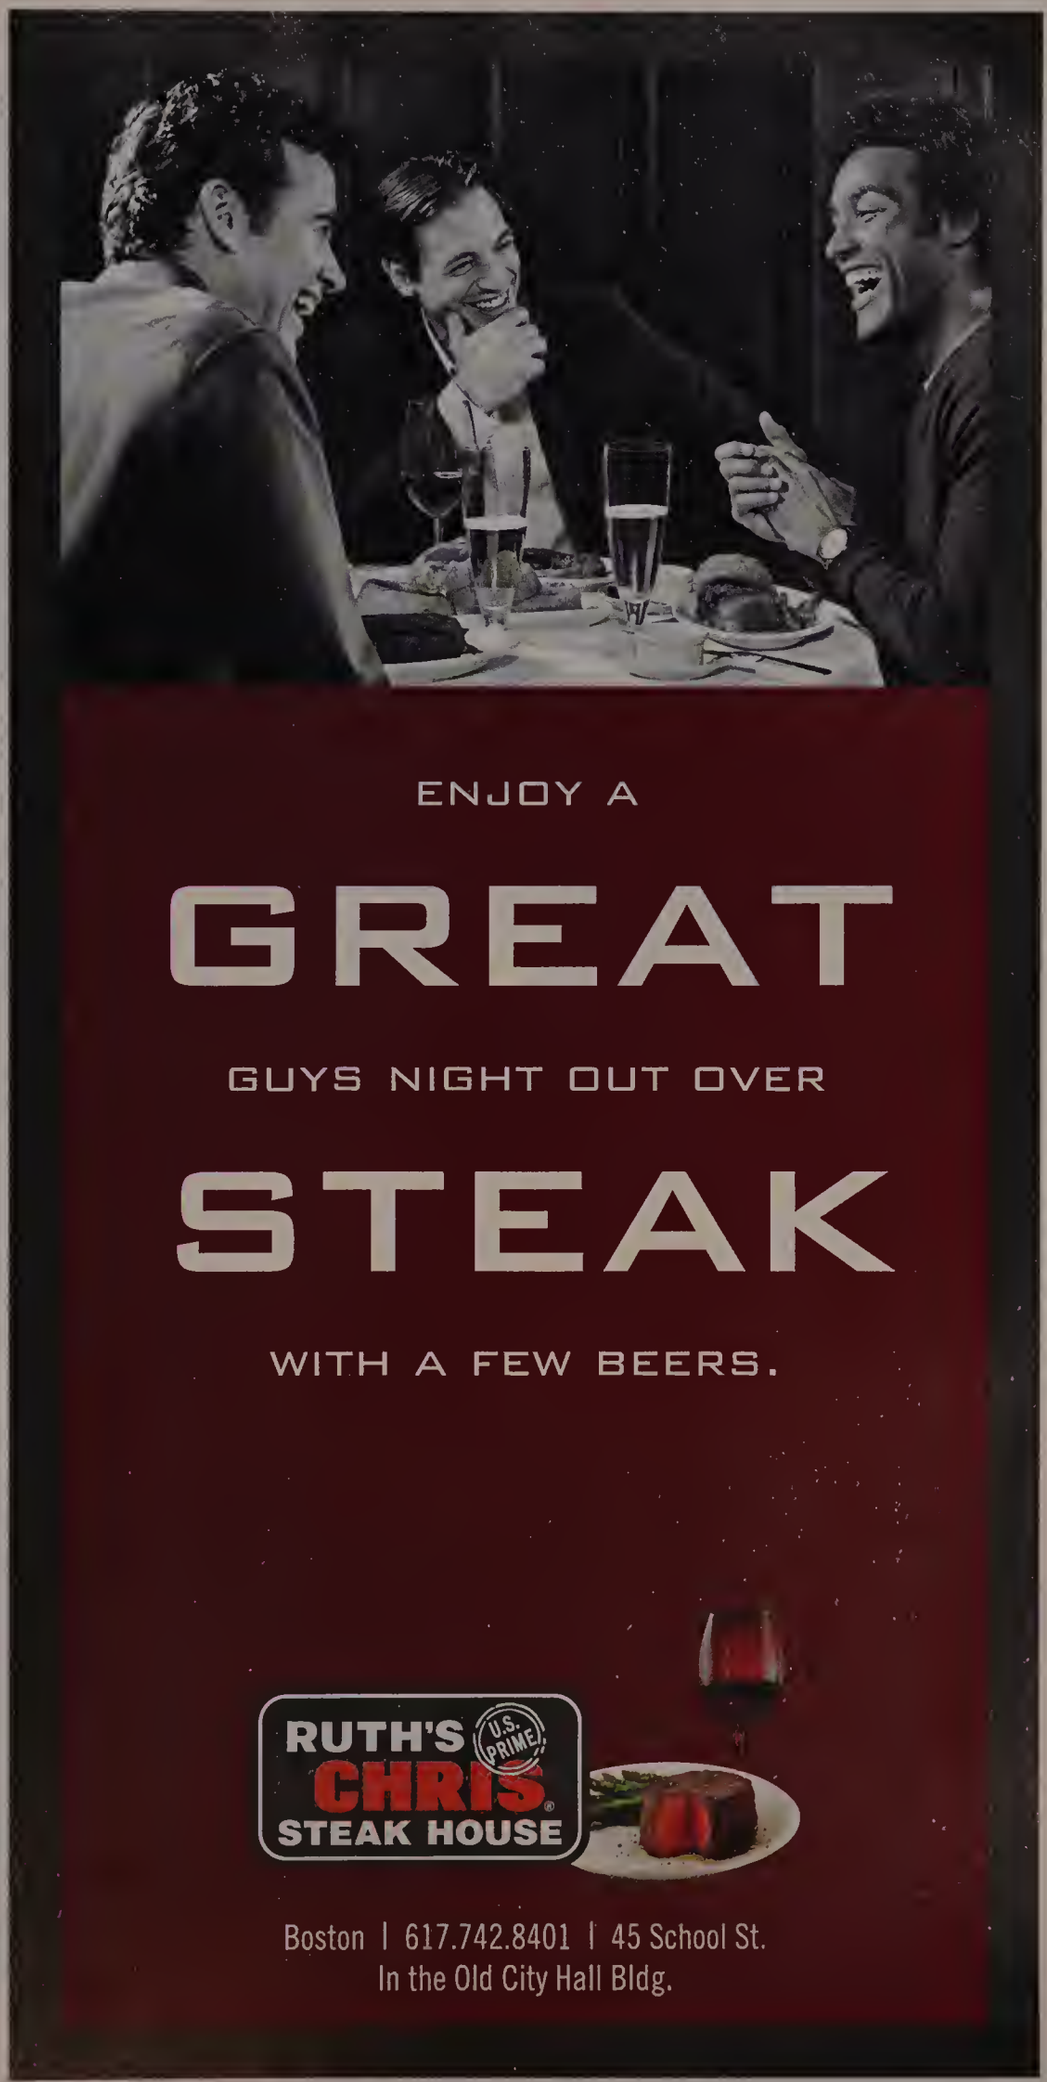
FOOD NERDS LOVE ALLSTON: IT HAS THE CITY'S densest, richest array of affordable, globe-trotting restaurants. But its bar scene is still wet behind the ears, dominated by casual hangouts slinging cheap beer and deep-fried foods to callow bro-dudes. If you've outgrown such places, you should be thrilled by the advent of the Glenville Stops, a handsome new pub/restaurant tucked away on Glenville Avenue, a five-minute walk from Allston's busiest intersection. Looking like a nicely restored factory with open rafters, its spare, clean design features giant windows, spaciously laid-out seating, a mahogany bar and elegant architectural touches like floating arches—clearly a space for grown-ups.

Beer geeks will want to drop a pin on their Google Maps here: It's one of Allston's best beer bars. It announces its seriousness with a rotating cask-conditioned ale, recently a delicately dry-hopped, barely fizzy, near-room-temperature ale from Ipswich ($7). Among 30 drafts are White Birch Berliner Weisse ($7), a mouth-puckeringly sour wheat beer (traditional fruit syrup optional), Holyoke's own High & Mighty Beer of the Gods ($6), an easy-drinking, grassy Kölsch-style pale lager, and Tröegs Troegenator Double Bock ($6), a strong dark lager evocative of anadama bread. Another 22 options in bottles include St. Peter's Organic English Ale ($10), boasting a smooth balance of malt and floral hops. It's a beauty of a list, with many styles covered almost entirely by small producers, all perfectly cared for and served.

Wine lovers are similarly well-treated by a fine by-the-glass list ($7-$12): a dozen whites, two rosés and 15 reds. Typical are seafood-friendly pours like the 2011 Martin Codax Rias Baixas albariño ($9), with its lemony minerality, and the non-vintage Domaine de Cagueloup Bandol rosé ($10), an exquisitely dry, pale-pink Provençal quaffer. Reds range from the simple, brambly 2011 Domaine La Ligiere Côtes du Rhône ($10) to the "Cabernet of the Month," recently a 2008 Bravante Vineyards cabernet sauvignon, a huge, plummy, smoothly tannic showstopper that gets more velvety in the glass: an $18 splurge that feels like a steal. The bottle list features 16 whites ($28-$70, most under $40), three rosés ($30-$40) and three dozen reds ($35-$370, most under $55), a useful mix of Old and New World wines with many impressively low markups, such as $75 for a 2009 Stag's Leap Artemis that typically retails for $55.

Meanwhile, chef Juan Pedrosa turns out an eclectic menu of snacks and shareable plates with Mediterranean, Latin American and Asian accents.

Day boat scallops ($11) feature two plump, nicely browned specimens in a fruity mole sauce topped with jicama and mango for brightness and crunch. Quick-seared shrimp ($9) with sofrito and chorizo aioli offer a tasty nod to Pedrosa's Puerto Rican ancestry. Griddled cheese ($5) is a sweet little bar bite of skillet-browned queso de freir given sweet/savory oomph with honey and oregano-infused oil, a smart riff on saganaki.



The Stops burger ($13) is very good of its kind: a pub-sized all-chuck patty on a good roll, plus fine hand-cut fries. More noteworthy is the masa burger ($12), a patty of grilled masa dough flecked with whole corn kernels, topped with housemade carrot and fennel pickles, arugula and herb aioli—an original and delicious veggie burger. Generously proportioned small plates include charred octopus ($15), featuring tender tentacles sliced into disks and tossed with gigante beans, masa seca and feta-like queso fresco, practically Greek/Mexican fusion. Sticky pork riblets ($11) irresistibly combine sweetly glazed, crisp half-spareribs with grilled shishito peppers: sensational. Lamb meatballs ($12) again evoke the Mediterranean via cool tzatziki and crunchy toasted bulgur. Vine-ripe tomatoes ($10) with grape compote, sunflower kernels, goddess dressing and shavings of Mahon yield another offbeat, sublime combination of flavors. On the short list of large plates, roasted cod ($21) arrives perfectly cooked atop polenta-like quinoa crema, brightly highlighted with sweet peas and their greens. Desserts—like Tara Leigh's chocolate cake ($10) with vanilla ice cream—are simple, satisfying and big enough for two.

The small, tight-knit staff for this 75-seat room delivers the kind of soft-spoken, genteel service I associate with nicer village pubs in England, birthplace of owner Michael Chapman, who mans the bar while his son and co-owner Fred runs the dining room. It's too soon to interpret this genial, polished tavern as a sign that Allston is growing up: Ball caps, Bud and ballyhoo still run rampant on the avenues. But mere blocks away, down a quiet side street, the Glenville Stops provides a novel oasis where adults can get first-rate food, a better class of drinks and civilized service, all at comfy neighborhood prices. ◆

LITTLE TO GIVE

THIS LONG-AWAITED LITERARY ADAPTATION ISN'T WORTH RECEIVING.

CHANCES ARE, IF YOU WERE IN MIDDLE school any time after the mid-'90s, you were exposed to Cambridge-based author Lois Lowry's 1993 Newbery Medal-winning young-adult novel, The Giver.

Myself, I was one of a bunch of phonies who came of age in the early '80s, so my forced literary diet consisted of Rye, Salinger-style. As such, my first exposure to Lowry's colorless Community of perfectly content drones who fear nothing—not war, not pain and especially not pleasure—came in this comeback effort from Aussie director Phillip Noyce. He's mostly languished in TV jobs in recent years, but the 64-year-old journeyman has had success with literary adaptations before, from 2002's one-two punch of Rabbit-Proof Fence and The Quiet American to a couple of crackling Jack Ryan thrillers starring Harrison Ford, released back when Lowry's book first began earning its reputation as a modern classic.

Few will accuse Noyce's adaptation of achieving such status here. But it's another 64-year-old, Oscar-winning actor Jeff Bridges, who's spent a total of 18 years trying to bring Lowry's beloved book to the big screen. Bridges optioned the rights with an eye toward making his directorial debut, with his father, Lloyd, in the role of the Giver, a bearded old man who "holds the memories of the true pain and pleasure of life," as Lowry described his singular abilities. Alas, the Sea Hunt star died in 1998, and the film adaptation languished for another 16 years.

That is, until young-adult novels, led by the success of Stephenie Meyer's Twilight in 2005, became a powerhouse publishing phenomenon. Suzanne Collins' The Hunger Games followed in 2008, with Veronica Roth's Divergent thrilling readers in 2011. And unless you've only been watching movies based on comic books (which is easy to do), you're likely aware that young-adult fiction has moved beyond bookshelves, finding greater success in cinemas.

The lucrative adaptations of these books (and their sequels) convinced the Weinstein Company to open their pockets and fund Bridges' dream project, only he ceded directing, taking on the role of the Giver himself. Doubling as producer, he lined up three-time Oscar winner Meryl Streep to play the Chief Elder, and the rest of the pieces fell into place.

It's a shame that few of those pieces came from Lowry's novel. Watching Noyce's obviously budget-rate film (the Weinsteins' pockets aren't so deep anymore), I was puzzled about how this story captivated a generation of schoolchildren. The Newbery Medal isn't given to just anything (and certainly not to the Twilights, the Hunger Games or the Divergents), so I dove into the book before penning this review. And you know what? It's wonderful. A real page-turner. Essentially a two-character chamber piece, the second half of the slim 179-page volume focuses mainly on the interactions between the Giver and Jonas, a 12-year-old boy who has been carefully selected as his Community's rare "Receiver of Memory," an important designation that requires intelligence, integrity, courage, wisdom...and the ability to endure pain. That, and the Capacity to See Beyond.

The recent adaptations of young-adult novels influenced by Lowry's text only serve to make Bridges' long-gestating project feel like an also-ran.

Here, Noyce evokes Seeing Beyond by gradually adding bits of color to a movie that begins in black and white. If you've seen Gary Ross' 1998 film, Pleasantville, you'll know what to expect here, and perhaps wonder whether that film owes a debt to Lowry's tome.

Certainly, the 25-year-old Roth has made no secret of the fact that Divergent wouldn't exist if she hadn't been exposed to The Giver. But all of the recent adaptations of young-adult novels influenced by Lowry's text only serve to make Bridges' long-gestating passion project feel like an also-ran. Audiences for these films skew toward the older teens and 20s, which probably explains the decision to advance Jonas' age to 16. (He's blandly played by 25-year-old Australian hunk Brenton Thwaites of Maleficent.) Also older are his friends Asher (20-year-old Cameron Monaghan) and Fiona (17-year-old Odeya Rush), whose roles have been expanded so that Fiona serves as Jonas' love interest, while Asher is now a romantic rival.

Likewise, Streep's Chief Elder has been blown up to villainous proportions, borrowing from—of all things—Kate Winslet's character in the filmed version of Divergent. And Asher's chosen role in the Community has gone from Assistant Director of Recreation on the page to Drone Pilot in the film, the better to add an action scene: After Jonas socks him in the face, Asher hunts his pal from the air. I don't remember those scenes from the book, either.

And while the novel certainly has Jonas awakening to a world of love, he's not in love. But here he sneaks away to kiss Fiona, who, because of this transgression, even gets threatened with being "released" (the Community's ritualistic form of population control through euthanasia). It's another newly added scene of unnecessary third-act conflict.

Bridges, however, clearly understands one of the things that probably drew him to the book: his solemn role as the Giver. It's one of the few elements worth praising in the picture. Another thing that remains the same? The Chief Elder's words to Community members as their adult roles are announced during a public ceremony: "Thank you for your childhood."

Just don't go into this film expecting to receive the same Giver you got in your childhood. ◆

AWAKENED

BON IVER SIDE PROJECT COMES INTO ITS OWN.

Long before Justin Vernon retired into the woods of Wisconsin and hatched his solo project Bon Iver, he tinkered with indie-rock friends from around that state. And they've since let their creative juices flow in the group Volcano Choir.

"It's not atypical, actually, for that to work that way around here," guitarist Chris Rosenau says from his home in Milwaukee, within four hours of his bandmates. "It's an open situation, with people playing in other people's bands all the time."

Vernon was fond of Collections of Colonies of Bees, a group that included Rosenau and other future members of Volcano Choir. They began to swap email files with song ideas that begat Unmap, released in 2009 shortly after Bon Iver's debut, For Emma, Forever Ago, and sharing its sparse, abstract atmospheres.

"For 90 percent of the writing on Unmap, Volcano Choir didn't exist, technically," Rosenau says. "It was us screwing around, and we realized at some point, there's music here." After a tour of Japan where the musicians recast Unmap for the stage, Volcano Choir became a flesh-and-blood band beyond its name, setting up the grander textural strokes of its 2013 sophomore album, Repave.

"It's a tightrope to figure out the correct direction for a song, and that's where all the years of utter, implicit trust come together," Rosenau says. "Volcano Choir, which is the largest band we're all in, is also the one project where we all feel the most free. There's no real genre. There are no real rules. We can bring in any idea, and it's put through the VC crucible and deconstructed and reconstructed."

That process took three years in the case of Repave, due to Bon Iver's heavy touring schedule as well as other members' music projects and day jobs. "You come back six months later, and you can approach it totally fresh," Rosenau says. "No one's married to any [song] parts. You can listen to a song as a whole, and the best stuff comes out."

"It was us screwing around, and we realized at some point, there's music here."

Repave spans a spectrum ranging from the acoustic guitar-flecked "Alaskans" to the stately march of "Byegones." Whereas Unmap echoed Bon Iver's eerie indie-folk, Repave reverberates in starker contrast to Vernon's better-known project.

"Seeing him get the attention he deserved was fantastic," Rosenau says of Bon Iver's Grammy-winning success, but he adds, "After Unmap, there was probably a bit of that [idea] resonating, like 'Let's make a proper kick-ass rock 'n' roll record and cement this shit forever, so Volcano Choir can stand as its own entity.'"

The group elevates further in concert. Vernon sings from a podium rigged with vocal-processing equipment that he triggers through keyboardist Thomas Wincek's computer banks. Wincek similarly works with loops in his current all-instrumental outfit All Tiny Creatures —as he did in Collections of Colonies of Bees, says Rosenau, who also layers with looping effects.

"We're very particular in executing these live performances without pre-recorded tracks," the guitarist says. "You have the freedom to improvise and be creative within these songs because all the changes are being made in real time."

To orchestrate all those song parts live, Volcano Choir also added a third guitarist, Andy Fitzpatrick, to a lineup completed by drummer Jon Mueller, bassist Matthew Skemp and guitarist Daniel Spack. "That's just kind of the ethos of this band, and us as musicians," Rosenau says. "It's harder, but it's way more rewarding."

Onstage, each musician tends to blur into the fabric, performing under oblique lighting in front of a topographic relief that recalls the ocean waves on the cover of Repave. "We wanted something atmospheric and simple," he says of the backdrop built by Michael Brown, lighting designer for the National.

Of course, that setup won't work the same in daylight when Volcano Choir hits Boston Calling on Sept. 6, the day after the National headlines. But that doesn't faze Rosenau. "The festival vibe in the daytime is great," contends the guitarist, whose group recently played at Montreal's Osheaga. "The lights and the backdrop, when we think of it, that's just how we see it in our brains." ◆

SELFIE CONTROL

THERE COMES A TIME IN EVERY MAN'S LIFE WHEN HE MUST TURN HIS CAMERA OUTWARD.

I HAVE LONG ARMS. JUNIOR YEAR IN HIGH school, our math teacher told us that most people's fingertip-to-fingertip span equals their height, which is probably one of those ratios that the ancient Greeks figured out when they weren't busy with epic architecture or nude wrestling. And sure enough, when we measured everyone's arms, the ratio held true for most of the class. I was the freakish exception—6 feet tall with 6-foot-4 arms. In high school you can at least hope that you'll have a growth spurt that will erase any physical deformities, but as it turned out, I'd attained my final form. The caterpillar would not become the butterfly, but a caterpillar with goofy monkey arms.

Little did I know that a strange intersection between technology and culture would eventually render my simian limbs an asset. I might have a hard time buying shirts, but I'm great at taking selfies. Or at least, I was. I don't know when I last took a selfie, but I do know it was my last. There comes a time when every craze is at its end, and selfies have run their course. If you want to be the last one to shut out the lights, take a selfie while doing CrossFit in your Vibrams.

There are three events that prompt me to pronounce the death of the selfie. First of all, a few weeks ago I received a selfie text from my dad. I'm not a theological scholar, but I believe the prophets predicted this moment, warning, "Whence the image of thine father appears before ye, scribed by his own self, demons shall soon roam the earth and tear asunder the union of Jay Z and Beyoncé." Everyone agreed he looked pretty good, though.

The second case of selfie abuse happened in Chatham, where we were at the beach with our friends Matt and Kristen. Three high school girls set up just down the beach from us, and Kristen was initially entertaining the idea of recruiting one of them to baby-sit that night.

That is, until we realized that the girls weren't at the beach. They were "at the beach," by which I mean they went to the beach for the sole purpose of showing everyone how much fun they were having at the beach. They never actually read a book or took a nap or idly tossed a shell into the waves. The entirety of their afternoon was spent striking various selfie poses and huddling around their phones to assess the results. Still, we hadn't entirely rejected the idea of foisting our kids upon them until one girl disappeared behind a dune and re-emerged wearing a different bathing suit. More photos ensued.

"Did that girl just do a wardrobe change?" Kristen asked. "Never mind on the baby-sitting. They're horrible people." We saw them again the next day at a different beach, where they repeated the whole process. Everything that happened in Chatham was dutifully recorded, provided it happened within two feet of their faces. These girls were so self-absorbed that if one got eaten by a shark, her last terrified thought would be "I didn't even get a chance to turn my flash on!" We barely know what Shakespeare looked like, yet every 15-year-old is going to need a rack of servers in Iceland just to store the files from last weekend's sleepover at Kaytielyn's house.

Lest you think I'm picking on girls, let's talk about the third horseman of the selfpocalypse, the selfie stick. I was in France last month, and selfie sticks were all over the place, toted nearly exclusively by middle-aged dudes. The selfie stick, if you're not familiar, is basically a pole with a shutter button on one end and your phone on the other. It's like having really long arms or a friend, neither of which is likely if you own a selfie stick. Narcissus himself would've thought it's maybe a little much. However, if you're in a big crowd, you can also point your camera outward and get a cool shot of all the other phones on poles, rising from the sea of humanity like dork periscopes.

The mystifying thing about selfies is that people take them even when there are other human beings in the immediate vicinity, ones who could hold the camera more than a few feet away. But nobody asks for help, because they want the selfie angle, free of the implication that another person was involved in any way: This is a photo of me, taken by me, documenting a place where I am. Anyone else in this shot is an extra in the grand drama known as my life.

Enough, I say. It's time for a new perspective—say, 15 or 20 feet away. That'll give everyone plenty of room to do skinny arm. ◆

This is a photo of me, taken by me, documenting a place where I am.

Think that's funny? Send unbiased emails to ezra@improper.com.

SELFIE-LOSOPHY: If there's no photo evidence of your day at the beach, did you even go to the beach at all?

SAFETY GUARANTEED

THE PATRIOTS PLAYER TALKS ABOUT TRAINING, TELEPATHY AND TOM BRADY.

PATRIOTS DEFENSIVE BACK DEVIN MCCOURTY, 27, HAS played for New England since 2010. An All-Pro cornerback during his rookie season, he later moved to safety and has also contributed as a kick returner. Born and raised in New Jersey, he attended Rutgers University, where he played for the Scarlet Knights alongside his identical twin, Jason, who now plays for the Tennessee Titans. In the aftermath of the Marathon bombings, he pledged $100 to the One Fund for every tackle he made last season.

JONATHAN SOROFF: How do you use your sociology degree?
DEVIN MCCOURTY: I guess I use it in managing people and trying to stay sane while being on the team. With all that's going on around you, it gets kind of crazy.

Do people underestimate your intelligence because you play football? Definitely. In college, a group used to call us "football geniuses," trying to be sarcastic.

If you weren't a pro football player, what do you think you'd do? Other than saving the world? I'd say probably be playing in the NBA.

Did you ever dress up as Rutgers' mascot, the Scarlet Knight, for Halloween? No, but I have dressed up as the Easter Bunny for Easter.

Do you ever just feel like punching Pat Patriot? No. I usually feel like punching out my brother's mascot, T-Rac.

What do you think your post-football career is going to look like? Sitting on the couch. [Laughs]

Finest moment on the field? The AFC Championship game when Baltimore missed the field goal, and we realized we were going to the Super Bowl.

So what is a gridiron? That's a good question. I honestly have no idea, and I'll bet you most football players don't, either.

Do you and your twin brother have telepathy? I wish, but no. When we're together, no matter how long we haven't seen each other, we're pretty good at finishing each other's sentences though.

Ever impersonated each other? Plenty of times. In fact, the first time I met his now wife, I pretended to be him, but she knew instantly. She'd studied pictures online to make sure she could tell the difference when she finally met me.

Your mother has said that the only way to tell you apart is by your scars. Yeah. I don't think we look alike, but everyone else says he has a scar on his forehead and I have one on my nose, and that's the only way to tell us apart.

Favorite board game? Probably Trouble. I played it as a kid. That, and Don't Wake Daddy.

How would you feel if one of your teammates were gay? I wouldn't be surprised.

How do you think it would be on the team? I think it would be cool. I'd be surprised if anybody had a real problem with it in this day and age.

What part of the job do you hate? Training camp.

What's the worst part of it? Practice. Every day, [you] get out there in full pads, practice for a couple of hours. It's hot. You're sleeping at a hotel. That's the worst part of playing professional football.

Do you get to eat whatever you want? Yes, I do. Not everyone does, but I eat whatever I want.

Best-dressed Patriot? A tossup between Tom Brady and Julian Edelman.

Biggest pig in the locker room? Well, he's not really that messy, but Vince Wilfork can eat a piece of chicken on the bone. He'll put it on bread, like it's a sandwich, and somehow he'll never bite the bone, and he eats the whole thing. I've never seen anyone else do that.

Favorite snack in Foxborough? Well, we used to have these SnackWell's cookies, but we went super nutritious, so now the best snack is actually sunflower seeds. Our snacks are so healthy, it's terrible. But training camp's good, because we get chocolate chip cookies and ice cream.

"Our snacks are so healthy, it's terrible. But training camp's good, because we get chocolate chip cookies and ice cream."

Best restaurant near Gillette Stadium? Skipjack's.

Do you consider yourself 100 percent Jersey boy? No. I'm more New York slash New Jersey.

Is 32 your lucky number? No, it was the only open number when I got to the Patriots. [Laughs]

Coolest thing people don't realize about Gillette? Probably how close they're sitting to Bill Belichick's office.

Do you ever get distracted by the cheerleaders? I can't lie. There are portions of the game where we're looking at them, yeah.

Finish this joke: What did the drag queen say to the tight end? I'll go with, "Nice butt."

Do you think pro athletes live in a bubble? I think some do. Like, I feel bad for Tom Brady. He probably can't even go to the grocery store. I can.

Last movie you watched that made you cry? When I was 5 and my grandmother used to make us watch Michael Jackson's "Thriller" video. It used to scare me and my brother.

Best fan sign you've ever seen at a game? It wasn't at a game. It was at training camp. Matt Light had a guy come in Daisy Duke shortshorts and his shirt tied like a girl, and he had a sign that said, "I'm open, Tom! Throw it here!" He was right under the clock on the practice field, so before each play, the shot would go to the clock. And every play, we saw this guy jumping up and down and holding this sign. It was hilarious.

Endorsement deal you'd most like? Doublemint gum.

So who would play you in the movie of your life? Morris Chestnut. ◆

MISSION: FEB. 1, 2015

THE PATRIOTS ARE PRIMED FOR ANOTHER CRACK AT THE SUPER BOWL.

BY EZRA DYER PHOTOS COURTESY OF THE NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS / DAVID SILVERMAN

Patriots fans are spoiled. Each August, as the preseason games unfold, we debate whether this year's team has the juice to win the Super Bowl. Think about that. There are always some uncertainties: Is the running game strong enough? Can the defense make key stops? But the Patriots have finished on top in the AFC East in 10 of the past 11 years. The one year they didn't win the division was 2008, when Tom Brady got hurt, and they still had 11 wins. They're never bad, and at this point we just take regular season success for granted and skip directly to discussions about January. Which is what we're about to do here. But first, let's just take a moment and relish that fact that we're still in the Brady-Belichick epoch of Patriots history, when each fall brings a heady wave of optimism that a new Lombardi Trophy is but five months away. Before you gripe that the Broncos now have Wes Welker and Aqib Talib, give thanks that the debate isn't about whether the Patriots are any good, but whether they're championship-caliber excellent. Follow along, then, as we enumerate seven reasons why this year's team is the best since 2007. And maybe—ultimately—better. »

MR. OCTOBER: BRANDON BROWNER

We won't see cornerback Brandon Browner until October, as he'll spend September serving a four-game suspension after testing positive for a banned substance. Which banned substance, you ask?

Let's be blunt: It was the sticky-icky, the dank, that Pacific Northwest ganja weed. And should that really surprise us? Browner was playing for Pete Carroll. In Seattle. The bye week probably included a mandatory peyote-fueled vision quest followed by a team discussion of whether Dark Side really syncs up with The Wizard of Oz.

In his short, uneven career, Browner's played the role of both superstar and troubled underachiever. The Patriots are wagering that we'll see something like 2011 Browner, when he had 51 tackles and six interceptions. Hey, if Belichick straightened out Randy Moss for at least a season, Browner might turn out to be the most dominant cornerback in the AFC. That is, except for the other big defensive acquisition...

REVISING THE D

The Patriots likely only have Darrelle Revis for a year, but hopefully he'll decide he enjoys playing football after New Year's Day and cut a deal in the offseason to stick around.

Because so far in practices, he looks like the pass-snuffing monster he was in New York. Revis can cover anyone, which addresses the Patriots' key defensive problem in recent years—you just knew that when it was all on the line, a high-powered offense could burn them for long passes. Talib helped on that front, but he was always hurt. Revis is an upgrade, a smart, quick cornerback who can go man-to-man with the best receivers in the league. With Browner and Revis joining a cast that already includes Devin McCourty, the Patriots' secondary is stronger than it's been since the days of Ty Law and Lawyer Milloy.

STICK A 'FORK IN 'EM

The secondary isn't the only place the Pats' defense looks good.

Human school bus Vince Wilfork is back to clog up the middle and haunt the nightmares of opposing quarterbacks with his deceptive quickness and hands that might have been surgically transplanted from a top-flight wide receiver. Yes, yes, the Patriots swear by that whole cold-blooded analytical thing when it comes to contracts. But sometimes it's worth it to pay up. Wilfork did a lot of saber rattling in the offseason, but in March he and the Patriots restructured his contract to keep the team's defensive anchor in Foxborough for up to three more years.

BRADY IS STILL ON TOP

No man in New England is more famous or more intensely scrutinized than Tom Brady, so if he lost a step we might be as likely to find out from TMZ as from ESPN.

When Brady shows the first hint of being washed up, 10 million haters will be ready to point it out. And that's just not happening. Brady, now 37, is enjoying the career longevity that can come with being a pocket quarterback. Please join us during the next five months in screaming "Noooo!" every time Crazy Legs Tommy tries scrambling for a first down.

Regardless of whether Jimmy Garoppolo and Ryan Mallett could be competent NFL quarterbacks, the basic plan is to hope we never find out. (Before the first preseason game on Aug. 7, Garoppolo had never even attended an NFL game.) We draft backup quarterbacks because they're cheap, not because anybody's being groomed to replace Brady.

LET'S GET GRONKED

Given last year's sudden evisceration of the Patriots' fearsome one-two tight end threat, it's amazing that the offense was any good at all.

Now Rob Gronkowski is back on the field after his knee injury. The good news in this, if there is some, is that the Patriots know they can score TDs without their favorite goofy giant running slants to the back of the end zone and easily snagging passes that need FAA clearance. But think about how many points they'll score with a healthy Gronk on the field. Between Gronkowski and Browner, the Patriots might be a significantly better team by the second month of the season than they are on Sept. 7 against the Dolphins. But just in case the rehab doesn't go as quickly as we hope, we'd suggest the Patriots acquire one or two of the other Gronkowski brothers. We're not sure, but we think there are about 15 of them.

THE WHITE STUFF

Will James White be this season's unknown rookie who becomes a powerhouse running back?

It happens every year somewhere in the league, and, like the Spanish Inquisition, you never see it coming. You're watching highlights one day when you realize there's a rookie who scored three TDs and you didn't draft him for your fantasy football team. White could be that kind of guy, a fourth-rounder out of Wisconsin who just might be one of those patented Belichick sneaky finds. White fumbled only twice in college—twice out of 754 touches. That's the kind of mistake-free performance that endears players to a certain hoodie-wearing sidelines mastermind. He can also catch passes and pound the ball up the middle, giving him versatility in an offense in which that's a prized attribute. White's likely not going to replace Stevan Ridley or Shane Vereen, but he might well surprise a few opposing defenses when he gets a chance to join the huddle.

LAFELL AND THE PYGMIES

The more weapons you have on offense, the more effective each component becomes.

And great short-out guys such as Danny Amendola and Julian Edelman—whom Brady affectionately called "little pygmies" at a preseason practice—become even more valuable if there's a legitimate deep threat to stretch the defense. Enter Brandon LaFell. He might not rack up a ton of receptions, but he'll have some long ones, and those sideline bombs will instill the fear that opens up the middle for those relentless five- and six-yarders that Brady strings together for touchdown drives. During his career, LaFell has averaged 14.3 yards per catch—more Randy Moss (15.6) than Wes Welker (11.1). Now that he's part of a pass-first offense, LaFell has the potential to have a huge year and take the Patriots' passing game to the next level.

#11 JULIAN EDELMAN

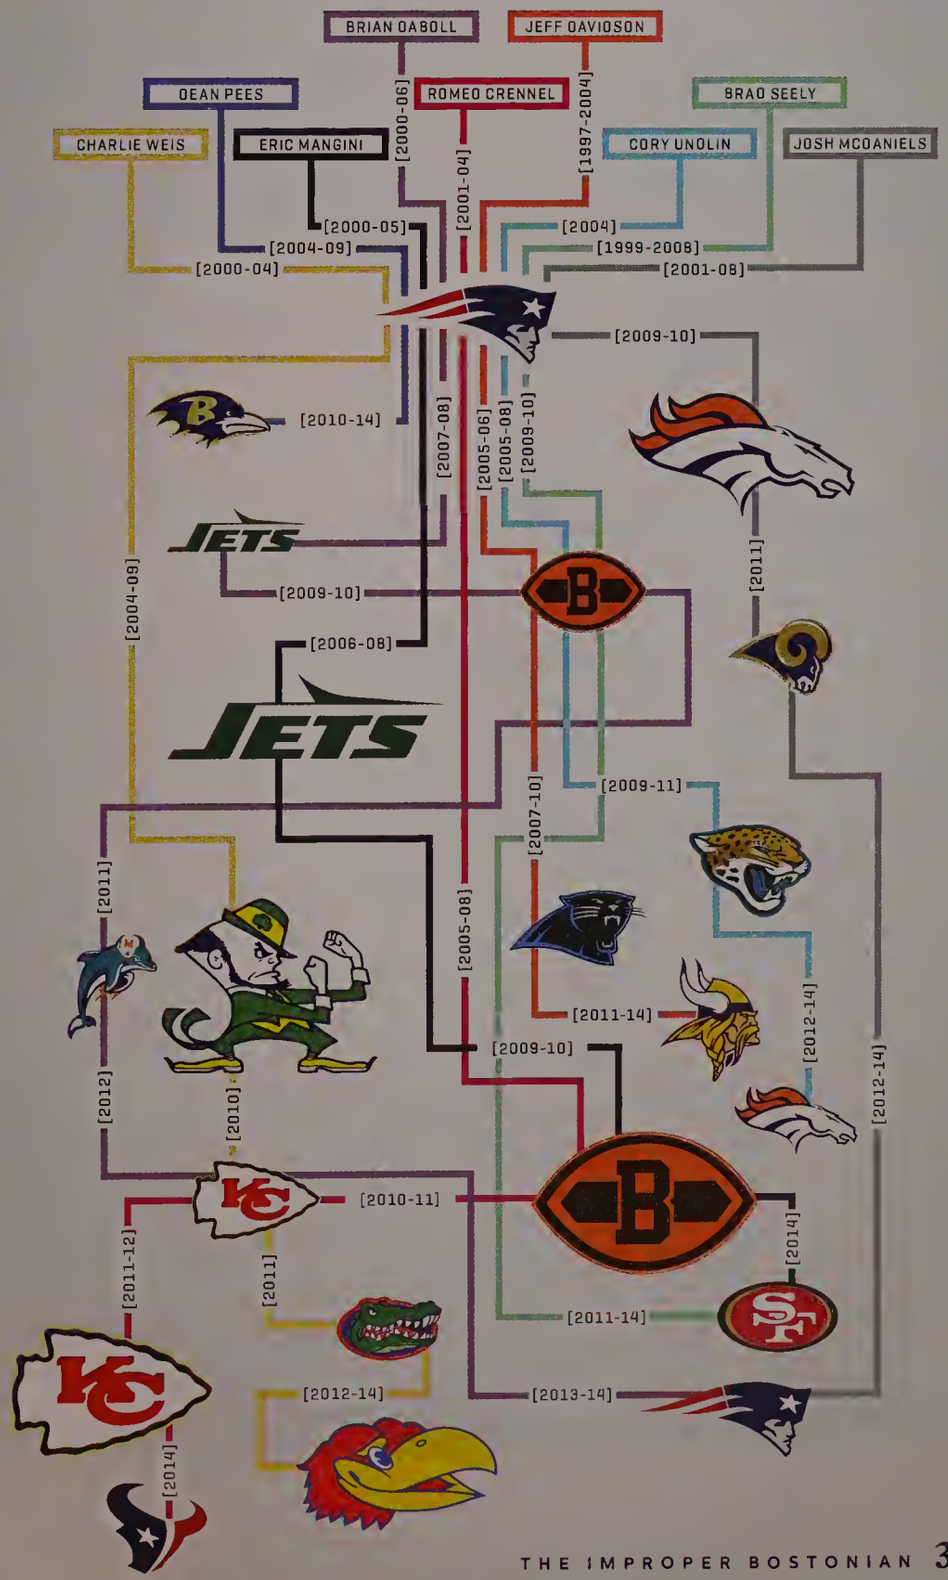
THE VERDICT

Here's the thing about the Patriots that differentiates them from the Red Sox, the Celtics or the Bruins.



Those teams all have the potential in any given year to either underachieve or spectacularly exceed your expectations. (See: the 2012 to 2013 Red Sox. Or the 2013 to 2014 Red Sox.) But a football team has so many moving parts that it's not terribly difficult to assess the whole, because any one fluke performer won't have an outsized influence, good or bad.

So when the Patriots look like they've put together an unstoppable offense, they probably have an unstoppable offense. If they look like they've got iffy receivers, they probably have iffy receivers. Yes, the preseason will offer a few red herrings, also known as Zach Sudfelds, but barring too many injuries, you have a sense of where the strengths and weaknesses are. And this year, frankly, there don't seem to be any glaring weaknesses. The defense looks great, the offense has plenty of weapons and Gisele still looks better than Eli Manning's wife. (Sorry, but when it comes to the younger Manning, the hurt hasn't gone away.) Assuming Brady makes it through the preseason with his knees still pointing in the correct direction, the Pats are worthy of the respect accorded by Vegas—right now the oddsmakers have the Seahawks, the Broncos, the Patriots and the 49ers looking like the surest bets for a championship in 2015.

So we're going to do something unprecedented in the long history of Improper Bostonian Patriots' previews: We're calling the Super Bowl. Forget your superstition and old-time New England pessimism. This team is awesome. Brady is crushing it, Revis is Alcatraz and they're going to own the Broncos and whoever else gets in the way. You can make your bets on whether Weird Al shows up in the halftime show, but don't bet against the Patriots earning another ring. The last Super Bowl win came 10 years ago. It's been long enough.

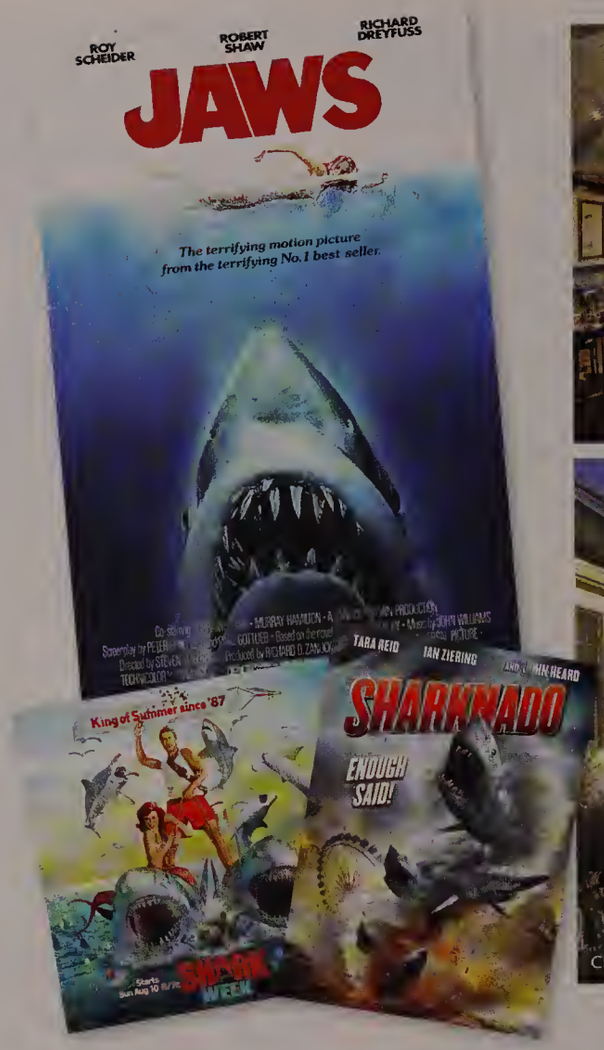
GO WITH THE FLOW: CHARTING THE PATS' 2004 COACHES

The 2004 Patriots' season culminated with the franchise's third title in four years, but the team's two coordinators left for head coaching jobs before the confetti had even finished falling on the Super Bowl celebration. Bill Belichick's staff of 13 assistant coaches that year included four future head coaches (denoted by bigger logos below) and four other future NFL coordinators. Some of the assistants (Matt Patricia, Ivan Fears) have stayed with New England for all 10 years, while others left this offseason (Dante Scarnecchia to retirement, Pepper Johnson to Buffalo). Here's a look at what the most well-traveled coaches from that legendary staff have done in the 10 years since the Patriots' last title. /Matt Martinelli

GREAT EXPECTATIONS

My quest to see a great white in the wild.

BY JONATHAN SOROFF
PHOTOGRAPHED BY MATT KALINOWSKI



For as long as I can remember, I've had a boundless fascination with sharks. Long before Jaws, which I saw at an inappropriately early age, there was a painting at the Museum of Fine Arts that completely captured my imagination: John Singleton Copley's Watson and the Shark. It depicts the true story of cabin boy Brook Watson, who was attacked by a shark in Havana Harbor in 1749. (He lived to tell the tale, and the painting launched Copley's career in London.) As a 6-year-old, I was mesmerized by the documentary Blue Water, White Death, and as an adult, the advent of Shark Week on Discovery Channel made watching TV in August seem almost worthwhile. If pressed for something to watch on a long-haul flight, I might actually choose Sharknado.

The obsession persists. I've been scuba diving with sharks in the Red Sea, the Caribbean and the Indian Ocean. When I try to focus my mind, I often think of a dive when a 6-foot white-tipped shark swam parallel to me for a few thrilling moments. But the one thing I've always wanted to see is a great white shark in the wild.

Carcharodon carcharias, the apex predator with which Steven Spielberg forever soured a generation on dipping a toe in the ocean, is the ne plus ultra of sharks for me, and there's a strangely sacred quality to the sentiment. As a child, I went to a shark tournament in Montauk and witnessed a great white hanging by its tail, its organs spilling out through its teeth onto the dock. It was a deeply depressing, ignominious sight. I've heard countless yarns from fishermen friends—some believable, most not—about close encounters. I know a number of people who have gone cage-diving in South Africa or Australia and been within a (well-armored) arm's reach, but there's something staged and contrived about this experience (and scientists theorize that these sharks have become conditioned to human contact).

In 2004, a great white was entrapped in a tidal inlet on a private island off Cape Cod. I was transfixed by the news coverage and desperately wanted to go see it. Since then, I've visited the island, and the very first thing I asked my hostess to show me was the photo album of the shark. It was distressed, looking for deeper water, but nevertheless, it was a magnificent sight. That was the way I wanted to encounter this animal I admire so tremendously: organically, on its own turf, and on its own terms.

For 100 years, Chatham Bars Inn has sat high on the bluff, like a dowager empress, overlooking the part of the harbor known as Aunt Lydia's Cove and two small barrier islands beyond it. It's a hub of socializing in this quaint yet elegant Cape Cod town, and on nice summer days, the thwack of tennis balls mingles with the laughter of diners at the Beach House, the squawk of seagulls and the squeals of children playing on the beach.

Sometime during the last decade, though, something significant happened. The seal population rebounded, accompanied by the animals that like to snack on them: great white sharks.

Gregory Skomal is a senior scientist with the state's Division of Marine Fisheries who's studying the increased shark presence along the outer Cape. Since 2009, he's tagged 41 great whites ranging in size from 8 to 18 feet.

"The numbers seem to be increasing," he says, describing the population as "similar to the town's. There are summer residents and tourists. Within the shark group, some stop by for a few days; others stay all season. But in July and August, they're here."

Skomal has been studying sharks for 32 years and says the highest concentration of great whites is "in the area we call 'Shark Cove,' off Monomoy Island."

As for the danger to swimmers: "All we can go on is risk assessments based on statistics, and shark attacks are so rare, the statistics are terrible. There was the guy from Colorado who was bitten in Truro in 2012, and the last shark attack in Massachusetts before that was in 1936."

Still, one might expect Chatham—with its high property values and reliance on tourism—to react the way the mayor of Amity does in Jaws: initial denial, followed by a blood-thirsty cry to rid the surrounding waters of these monsters.

"We want people to understand and appreciate what an important part of the ocean environment these animals are, and to translate people's fear into fascination."

A RECORDING RECEIVER

Instead, Chatham has chosen to embrace its sharks, or at least to make lemons into lemonade. The Chatham Shark Center, whose mission is to promote "education, awareness, preservation and conservation for the great white shark [and its] presence in Chatham," was founded in 2013 by a group of civic-minded residents.

"We're on track to open in 2014," says trustee Paul Litwin, spreading out architectural renderings of the museum on a table in the lobby of Chatham Bars Inn. "We want people to understand and appreciate what an important part of the ocean environment these animals are, and to translate people's fear into fascination."

Lisa Franz, a fellow trustee and the executive director of Chatham's Chamber of Commerce, adds, "We already have all these tourists coming into town, saying, 'Where can I see a great white shark?' The joke was to tell them to go down to the Fish Pier and wait, because the seals love to eat the scraps the fishermen throw over. But the answer seemed to be to build a facility to satisfy their curiosity and hopefully help raise funds for research and conservation."

Meanwhile, the Atlantic White Shark Conservancy (AWSC), founded by naturalist Cynthia Wigren, directly supports Skomal's research, providing the tagging vessel and funding for tagging equipment and operations. (While Skomal receives a salary from the state, all the money for his field work comes from donations and grants.)

"The biggest expense is the spotter plane," Wigren explains. "One of our board members has donated both his boat and his time for the two days a week from June to October that we're out on the water, but all that flying time adds up."

Last summer, Chatham Bars Inn approached the conservancy with the concept of offering its guests a shark research experience—time on the water to discuss Skomal's work with one of the volunteers and look for shark-related activity—with a portion of the proceeds helping to fund the AWSC. Needless to say, this piqued my interest the way blood in the water catches a great white's attention.

On a rainy July morning, I headed down to the inn's dock to meet Marianne Long, a conservancy volunteer. We boarded the inn's 29-foot custom launch, punnily named the Bar Tender, which was skippered by the fresh-faced Jarred Riel.

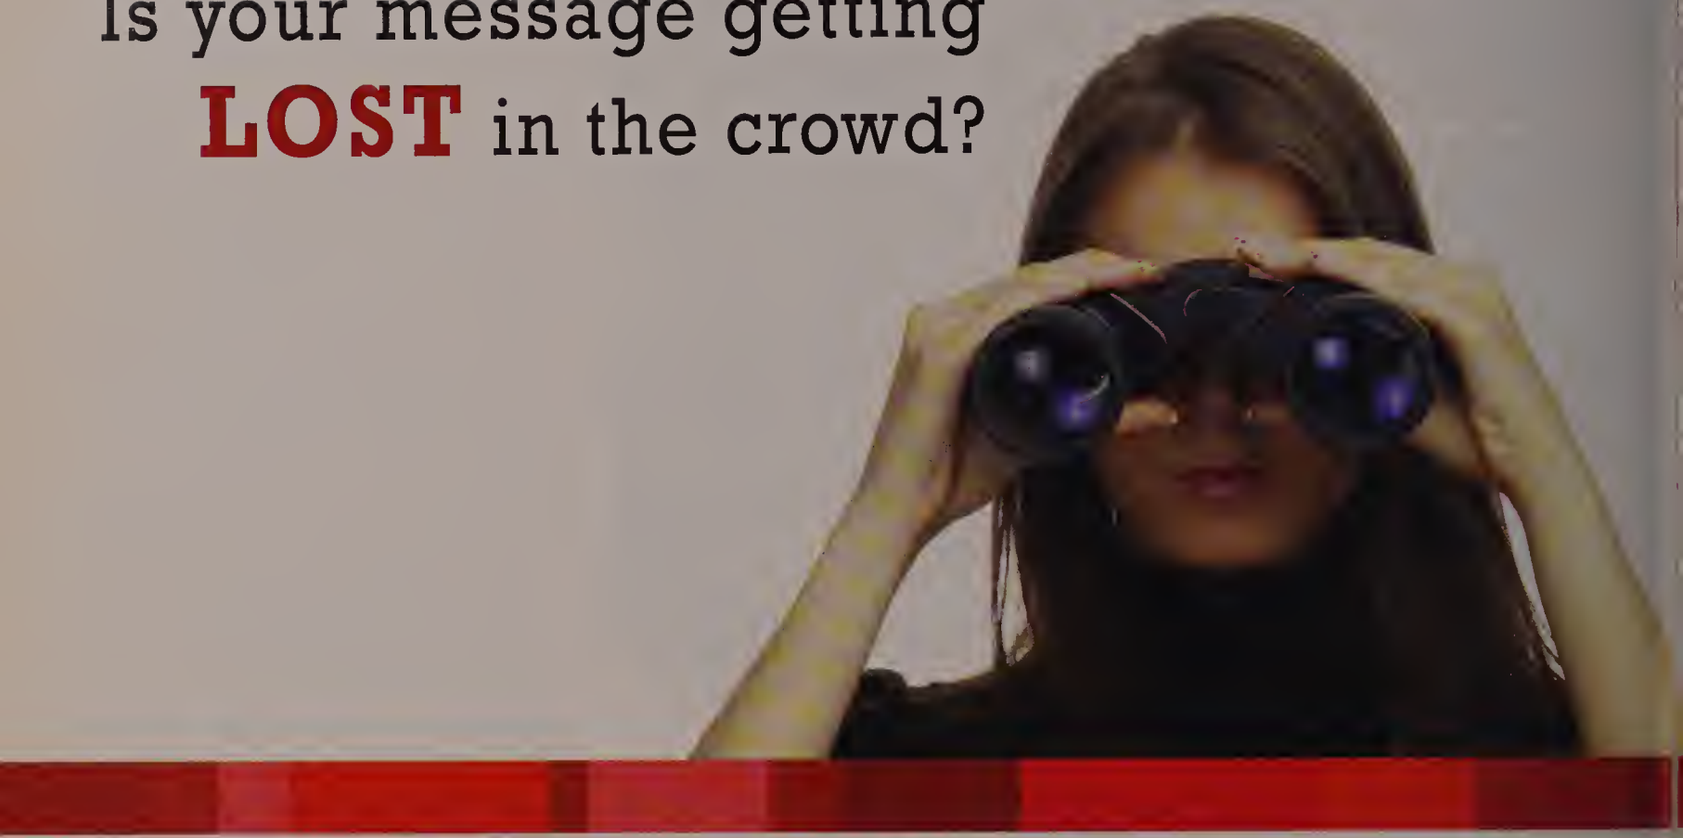
As we got out into the middle of the harbor, Long pointed out a green buoy in the channel. It was equipped with a receiver. Whenever a tagged shark swims within a few hundred yards of it, the device records the identity of the shark, the date and the time. (To allay swimmers' fears: Only a few sharks are detected every summer, and there's little reason to believe that the sharks actually do follow the seals over to their free lunch at the Fish Pier.)

Despite the steady drizzle, Long risked her laptop to download the receiver's data. Then we set out for the barrier islands. Unremarkable from a distance, they soon resolve into a writhing mass of gray seals, so thick you can't see the sand underneath them. Because the Bar Tender has a remarkably shallow draft, Riel was able to maneuver us within feet of the shore, and as we approached, seals peeled off the beach and into the water like corpulent triathletes, issuing pissed-off barks and indignant snorts. We were surrounded by hundreds of intelligent-looking heads, bobbing in the water and staring at us with as much curiosity as we regarded them.

Long explained that some of the seals bitten by sharks escape or are released, so one of the things we looked for was bleeding or scarring on the seals still on the beach.

"Some people don't love this part," she said.

"So...what are our actual chances of seeing a shark out here today?" I finally brought myself to ask.



"Realistically?" she said. "Pretty close to none."

Good news for the beachgoers in Chatham. Bad news for me. Did I want to see one? Certainly. Did I honestly expect to? No. It's not like great white sharks come when you whistle, and even if we'd had a boatload of chum, it would still be an incredible long shot. But I understood more about great whites than I did before, and, more importantly, I appreciated how little we actually know about them.

This summer, the conservancy began funding a population study that's expected to take the next three to five years, but Skomal thinks that the population is on the rise. In fact, just two weeks after my excursion, he tagged a 12-footer off Chatham's coast. So I still stand a chance of encountering a great white sometime when I'm out on the water. And in the meantime, I'm just happy to know they're out there.

METRO BOSTON'S COLORFUL GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND INDELIBLE ART

AGENDA for 8/20–9/2

Think Ink

An unconventional convention

IT'S ALL TOO EASY TO FORGET THAT tattooing was illegal in the Bay State for 38 years—the ban was only overturned in 2000—and that there was a time when sporting visible ink as good as barred you from any sort of "corporate" career. But while tattoos have become widely accepted (dare we say mainstream?), one thing hasn't changed: They serve as a means of self-expression as varied and unique as the people who rock them. It's an art form that will be celebrated and explored for the 13th year at the Boston Tattoo Convention, a full weekend dedicated to ink. The con's colorful bill of events includes artist demos, tattoo contests, giveaways, a Miss Boston Ink Beauty competition, and seminars and panels on topics ranging from techniques for black-and-gray tattooing to tips for progressive piercing. So whether you're considering your very first piece or finishing up your second sleeve, get inspired this Labor Day weekend at the Boston Back Bay Sheraton Hotel. / Alexandra Cavallo

THE BOSTON TATTOO CONVENTION runs Aug. 29–31 at the Boston Back Bay Sheraton Hotel, 39 Dalton St., Boston. $25–$65 bostontattooconvention.com.

FINDING A GOOD HOOK

Peter Pan has a prologue. Before everyone's favorite poster child for arrested development graced page, stage or screen, there was a real family that helped inspire J.M. Barrie's classic tale. Based upon the 2004 Johnny Depp film of the same name, the American Repertory Theater's Finding Neverland follows Barrie's relationship with the family that sparked his imagination—and the imaginations of generations of children to come—leading him to create a magical world of man-eating crocodiles, wicked pirates, ticking clocks, fairies and flights of fancy...and otherwise. Choreographed by So You Think You Can Dance's Mia Michaels, with music by pop singer and X Factor UK judge Gary Barlow, this world premiere production runs through Sept. 28 at the Loeb Drama Center. | Alexandra Cavallo.

BRAIIINS We're deep in the dog days of summer, when crisp fall weather is beginning to sound pretty appealing and heat-addled city denizens are trudging to work like besuited zombies. Cool off—and hang with some actual reanimated corpses—when the well-air-conditioned Coolidge presents a rare 35-mm screening of George Romero's Night of the Living Dead. The Godfather of the Dead's first zombie movie paved the way for countless sequels, genre flicks and TV shows, including AMC's hit series The Walking Dead, but his 1968 original is still considered the best of the genre. The dead rise again when it screens Aug. 22 and 23 as part of the Coolidge Corner Theatre's After Midnite series. | Alexandra Cavallo

Begin Again ★★★ This film's original title, Can a Song Save Your Life?, was probably a little too on-the-nose—even for a narrative as sincere, heartfelt and corny as Once writer/director John Carney's latest music-driven confection. So Begin Again he did with a new name for this New York-set charmer, which got lost in the shuffle when it premiered at last September's Toronto Film Festival. It took a while to arrive in multiplexes, but saving this small-scale toe-tapper for summer is a canny bit of counterprogramming. After all, while it shares some of the same shaggy-dog pleasures as Carney's 2006 crowd-pleaser, nothing blows up, no one gets shot and the only hero to show up on screen is Dan Mulligan, a fallen record-label co-founder. Sure, he's played by Mark Ruffalo—the Incredible Hulk himself—but Dan's the only one in need of saving. That is, until he drunkenly stumbles into an East Village club and hears lovelorn songwriter Greta (Keira Knightley, who can sing!) and recognizes the potential for mutual salvation—and Carney scores a hit once again. (At West Newton.)

Boyhood ★★★1/2 With his landmark trilogy—1995's Before Sunrise, 2004's Before Sunset and last year's Before Midnight—writer/director Richard Linklater has spent 18 years tracking the lives of two lovers (Julie Delpy and Ethan Hawke), checking in with them at nine-year intervals. With his latest extended-storytelling experiment, an epic chronicle of childhood's mundane moments filmed over 12 years, Linklater finds the poetry in growing up. When we meet Mason Evans Jr. (played by newcomer Ellar Coltrane from ages 6 to 18), he's a cute little moppet going about everyday kid stuff. But Linklater's not interested in an idyllic Norman Rockwell portrait. Mason's part of a fractured family, held together by his mom (Patricia Arquette, never better). Humorous signifiers act as time capsules, buried throughout the film to clue us into the year of the action. Some of these signposts are quite literal: By the end of W's second term, Mason Sr. (Hawke) has his son planting Obama signs on neighborhood lawns—while uprooting McCain posters. It's just one of life's little moments that makes this 2 hour and 46 minute film move so effortlessly fast. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Calvary ★★★★ "I first tasted semen when I was 7 years old." Thus is the first of many memorable lines in writer/director John Michael McDonagh's moving, darkly comic sophomore film—one spoken in a brogue by an unseen man sitting opposite Father James Lavelle (the great Brendan Gleeson) inside the confessional of a sleepy Irish fishing village. "It's certainly a startling opening line," responds the priest, before this lost sheep continues his tale of being raped by a member of the clergy—and shares his intention to exact murderous revenge in a week's time upon the innocent Lavelle, a man incapable of horrors that became far too commonplace. And so, a dead man walks, still tending to his flock, his trials mounting by the day. It's a classic American Western scenario, with the massive rocky outgrowths and damp green fields of Easkey, Ireland, standing in for the dust of Monument Valley. One might willfully misread the movie's title, but alas, there's no cavalry on the way; Lavelle stands alone. Like Gary Cooper's Marshal Kane in High Noon, he marches stoically toward his would-be killer, armed with nothing but his faith. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

Chef ★★★ This isn't a movie about Jon Favreau. Sure, he wrote, directed and starred in this comedy about a once-hot gourmet chef, Carl Casper, who's in a creative rut. After being called out by his critics, Casper begins serving up delectable Cuban sandwiches from a food truck, winning back favor from customers and critics alike by returning to his roots. Favreau's a filmmaker who impressed with the hit indies Swingers and Made, and then a couple of massive Iron Man movies, before making the joyless critical and commercial failure Cowboys & Aliens. But Chef is a small picture, a tasty concoction in which his simmering acting chops are brought to a boil by 10-year-old Emjay Anthony, who delightfully underplays Casper's son, Percy, as the two bond over the heat of the truck's grill on a cross-country trip. Is Favreau as thin-skinned as Casper, who gets into a very public social media spat with one of his earliest supporters? Who cares, when such big talents as Dustin Hoffman, John Leguizamo, Sofia Vergara, Oliver Platt, Scarlett Johansson and Robert Downey Jr. are along for the ride? (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Get on Up ★★★ Only in Hollywood can a white man become a primary chronicler of the African American experience. Nevertheless, director Tate Taylor displays the same deft hand in orchestrating a fine ensemble cast (including Nelsan Ellis, Viola Davis, Octavia Spencer, Craig Robinson and Dan Aykroyd) as he did in the surprise Oscar nominee The Help. His music-driven follow-up offers a nonlinear look at the life of "the Godfather of Soul," James Brown, as played by Chadwick Boseman. The screenplay does a decent job of distilling six decades of his career, bouncing from 1988 to 1968 to 1938 and back. The music is wonderful, and the film has an infectious energy that's missing in Jersey Boys, Clint Eastwood's oddly sterile musical biopic that lacks the one element that elevates Taylor's pic beyond the boilerplate: a Movie Star performance. After his terrific turn as Jackie Robinson in 42 and this iconic rendering of Brown (a role that easily could have lapsed into Eddie Murphy-like caricature), Boseman has portrayed two of the most influential black figures of the 20th century. He's a talent for the 21st. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Guardians of the Galaxy ★★ Risking the rage of fanboys everywhere, I find myself oddly detached from James Gunn's adaptation of this atypical Marvel Comics property. In the past, we've had Robert Downey Jr. to make his iron suit shine, and, by golly, that Chris Evans sure is keen as America's oldest Boy Scout—but they exist here, on planet Earth. Charming though Chris Pratt is in his first starring role, he's stuck in a space opera that will sell a lot of toys (and comic books) but test those with low tolerance for characters named Drax, Gamora, Groot or... Yondu Udonta? Pratt plays Peter Quill, or "Star-Lord," a case of arrested development—but then, he was abducted by aliens before hitting puberty. Twenty-six years later, he leads a band of intergalactic misfits as massive chunks of exposition hurtle past us. (Let's see, after they visit the planets Morag, Xander and Nova Prime, they'll travel to Nowhere, aka "the severed head of an ancient celestial being.") Despite genuinely funny performances from Pratt and Bradley Cooper (voicing a wisecracking, gun-toting raccoon), the film wears thin before succumbing to third-act Marvel bloat. Watch it make a fortune. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

How to Train Your Dragon 2 ★★★1/2 When How to Train Your Dragon hit theaters, DreamWorks Animation finally offered Disney/Pixar some legitimate competition—not only visually, but also with its level of storytelling and character sophistication. Sure, co-directors Dean DeBlois and Chris Sanders had fashioned a familiar story with their tale of Hiccup (voiced by Jay Baruchel), the scrawny Viking who bonds with the creature that's supposed to be his sworn enemy. Toothless, his cat-like dragon steed, shared DNA with the alien in DeBlois and Sanders' earlier success, Lilo & Stitch, which also featured a youth secretly fostering a lethal beast. And while it may have lacked the depth of Pixar's best, it was still a real beauty. Flying solo this time, DeBlois picks up five years after Hiccup and Toothless united man and monster in the Vikings' island community. The pair spend their days soaring through the skies and charting new territories, until they encounter the mysterious Dragon Rider—and a devastating new threat. While this gorgeously rendered sequel isn't as humorous as its predecessor, it's darker, richer and more mature—much like its older and wiser protagonist. (In the suburbs.)

The Hundred-Foot Journey ★★1/2 Bringing novelist Richard C. Morais' best-seller to the big screen, director Lasse Hallström employs the same unsubtle touch that made 2000's Chocolat, his sultry romantic drama set in a small French village, such a hit. No doubt, that's exactly what producers Steven Spielberg and Oprah Winfrey wanted for the tale of Hassan Kadam (Manish Dayal), a handsome culinary magician who flees London ("British vegetables have no soul," you see) with his siblings and their Papa (Om Puri) after they've already been displaced from their native India. The family settles in—yes—a small French village after a vehicular mishap nearly kills them. "Maybe brakes break for a reason," announces the elder Kadam, rationalizing his intention to open an Indian restaurant 100 feet from the elegant Michelin-starred restaurant lorded over by Madame Mallory (Helen Mirren, who won't win another Oscar for her French accent). Hassan's talents eventually broker a truce to the war between the eateries, but a third-act detour to Paris nearly kills the film—until Dayal's star turn charms the picture back to life during the conclusion's return to the south of France. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Into the Storm ★ Second only to February, August is when movie studios send lame films out to movie theater pasture to be shot—or at least when they get suckers to part with their hard-earned cash. Take Step Up All In, which is apparently so bad that it didn't screen for press. Then there's this third-rate knockoff of second-rate 1996 blockbuster Twister, a storm-chasing thriller that at least featured a first-rate character actor, the late, great Philip Seymour Hoffman, who helped ground sights like tornado-swept cows. To be fair, director Steven Quale's film does star Matt Walsh, who has 105 acting credits, so it's not like he hasn't paid his dues; you'll recognize his face, if not his name. And yet, he's stuck in the umpteenth movie in recent memory that relies on the tired "found footage" gimmick that always leaves me wondering, "Who found this?" when I should really be asking, "Why am I watching this?" Oh, right—so you don't have to. Need more warning? This schlock is penned by John Swetnam, the same talent who wrote...Step Up All In. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Jersey Boys ★★1/2 While Clint Eastwood's latest directorial effort is a hit-or-miss affair, you might not want to miss hearing the hits of Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons, whose rise and fall (and rise again) is dramatized in a more realistic fashion than you might expect from a film version of a Broadway musical. This isn't one of those razzle-dazzle affairs where characters spontaneously burst into song and dance across the screen in a flurry of motion. Instead, the group's music is presented as live performances while they're touring, recording or appearing on American Bandstand or The Ed Sullivan Show. But while the Jersey boys might not sing any dialogue, they do address the audience directly from time to time. Does it work? Let's just say Eastwood's not exactly Martin Scorsese. So, it's unfortunate to see him introduce a local made man (Christopher Walken) early on; the mob aspects and other darker edges are fairly toothless. Group infighting, financial problems and domestic dramas pile up predictably, until you wish the Four Seasons would stop turning to speak to us and just sing. Still, your parents will love it. (In the suburbs.)

Land Ho! ★★★1/2 Martha Stephens wrote and directed the features Passenger Pigeons and Pilgrim Song, which you likely haven't heard of. Nevertheless, without those films under her belt, she wouldn't have discovered Southern spitfire Earl Lynn Nelson, a newcomer to the acting game who starred in both. Through some miracle (likely the hand of executive producer David Gordon Green), Stephens has been partnered with Aaron Katz, the talented writer/director behind little-seen indies Quiet City, Cold Weather and Dance Party, USA. It's a great mix. The two share writing and directing credits on this crowd pleaser about a pair of 60-something brothers-in-laws—one widowed, one divorced—who rekindle their bond during a picturesque trip to Iceland. "Ex-brother-in-laws," corrects Colin (Australian Paul Eenhoorn, star of This Is Martin Bonner), after Mitch (Nelson) apologizes for "tricking" him into the trip. "That's a pretty lousy thing to do," Colin deadpans. "Driving through the country, staying at nice hotels, eating good food." Our odd couple also spend an evening clubbing with two young "tight-assed women," which is a compliment coming from Mitch, who's fond of calling people "turd." Delightful. (At Kendall Square.)

Maleficent ★★ After questionably rebooting Alice in Wonderland as a vehicle for Johnny Depp's Mad Hatter, Disney's at it again, needlessly revisiting Sleeping Beauty in live action from the perspective of Maleficent, who's given high-cheekboned life by Angelina Jolie. Continuing the violent tradition of Disney's live-action misfire The Lone Ranger, FRIEND-ZONED Daniel Radcliffe plays a med-school dropout with a crush in What If.

screenwriter Linda Woolverton spins a wheel around rape culture, as future king Stefan (Sharlto Copley) revisits the moors where he shared a childhood romance with Maleficent, then a young winged fairy. Returning to the older, lovesick girl, he essentially roofies her. Waking alone, she's horrified to discover that Stefan has clipped her wings. His daughter, Princess Aurora (Elle Fanning), is reduced to a supporting role, but a heavy still has to die, as all irredeemable Disney villains must. Ah, but it's not Maleficent. In this unsettling revision, she's a victim, and her trauma is palpable. Fun for the whole family! (In the suburbs.)

What If ★★1/2 With his latest film, director Michael Dowse doesn't quite score a winning goal as he did with his last picture, the criminally underseen hockey comedy Goon. But then, he doesn't have another crackling, profane script to shoot from. In fact, the swears have been cut entirely from this once-R-rated romantic comedy/drama, which was originally known as The F Word. As released, this PG-13 exploration of "the friend zone" awkwardly overdubs that most flexible of profanities with... "fishhook"? At least Dowse has a couple of MVPs in his leads. Harry Potter's Daniel Radcliffe retains his British accent as med-school dropout Wallace, whom we first see as he deletes the breakup voicemail he's been listening to on his iPhone for 379 days. Moments later, he meets animator Chantry (Zoe Kazan) as the two arrange magnetic poetry at a house party hosted by Allan (Adam Driver), Chantry's cousin and Wallace's best friend. Alas, standing between these obvious soul mates is UN lawyer Ben (Rafe Spall), Chantry's longtime boyfriend. Will these two ever recognize what the audience does five minutes in? What the fishhook do you think? (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

CULT CLASSIC There's a reason sprawling symphonic psych-pop outfit the Polyphonic Spree draws comparisons to the Godspell cast: The outré Dallas band—which has counted Annie Clark (aka St. Vincent) in its oft-fluctuating lineup—performs in rainbow-hued floor-length robes and has amassed a cult-like following since its 2000 inception. Those fans helped fund their fourth full-length studio album, last summer's Yes, It's True, but the Spree has also put a psychedelic spin on everything from Christmas classics to tunes from The Rocky Horror Picture Show. MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

SKIN DEEP Photographer John Wyatt finds inspiration for his work in the art of his subjects—body art, that is. Wyatt has taken black-and-white portraits of heavily tattooed people, in their own environments, for more than three decades. He also spent more than 30 years as a social worker, and he's used those listening skills in his artistic career, getting to know his subjects intimately and recording audio from their sessions. Transcriptions from those recordings accompany his evocative portraits in photo book turned exhibit Under My Skin. Catch his career-spanning show through Oct. 3 at the Griffin Museum at Digital Silver Imaging. / Abagail Sullivan

A PINT OF HISTORY

Legend has it that, four score and seven beers ago, native Bostonian Ben Franklin proclaimed, "Beer is proof that God loves us and wants us to be happy." Turns out, he was actually writing about wine, but we can see why the sentiment spread—and it's certainly one shared by local writer and beer enthusiast Norman Miller. In Boston Beer: A History of Brewing in the Hub, he covers everything from the city's earliest's breweries to temperance to Trillium, examining how Prohibition wiped out the city's beer culture and how it resurged after Sam Adams' brews helped spark the craft revolution in the '80s. Drink in some rich history on Aug. 27 at Porter Square Books. / Hannah Feeney

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of t he three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

A re-enactment at a Night at the Old Manse

John Vasconcellos and Dan Elias at a Night at the Old Manse

CUE GLORIA GAYNOR

Few charity fashion shows are as ambitious as Catwalk for BMC Cancer Care, which took over the State Room for an evening of cocktails and a runway show with clothing by local designers like David Josef, Denise Hajjar and Candice Wu, modeled by pros, demi /hemi-/semi-celebs like yours truly and the evening's real stars: cancer patients who were treated at Boston Medical Center.

Among the prominent faces: event founder Bryan Finocchio and his handsome other half, Salvatore Forte, Channel 7 eye candy Kim Khazei and Adam Williams (who emceed), City Hall hottie Sam Chambers, hunky real estate hustler Kris MacDonald, the unsinkable Mary Kakas, blond beauty Monica Pietrzak, legendary fashionista Yolanda Cellucci and the dapper Joe Berkeley, and others of an equally impressive milieu.

It's hard to say which was more breathtaking—the city views or the runway fashions—but the evening's uncontestable highlight was the standing ovation for the cancer survivors strutting their stuff. Overheard backstage: A model asked, "Are you nervous?" to which the response was "After dealing with stage 4 colon cancer, there isn't a whole lot that scares me."

LET'S DO THE TIME WARP AGAIN

It was as if Mr. Peabody told Sherman to set the WABAC machine to 1770 for A Night at the Old Manse, the Trustees of Reservations' annual summer soiree. The historic house in Concord (which witnessed the shot heard 'round the world and was a home to Ralph Waldo Emerson and Nathaniel Hawthorne) is imposing enough. Add a full moon, free-flowing Moscow mules and some highly entertaining historical re-enactments, and you've got yourself a party.

Guests were greeted by actors dressed as Emerson and Hawthorne (who never broke character, even when direct descendants quizzed them), and cocktails were interrupted by a rousing and rather hilarious re-enactment of the Battle of Lexington and Concord.

"They're certainly getting their money's worth," said one guest, referring to the knot of curious tourists watching from the other side of the field.

Dinner was served under a big top that could have benefited from mosquito netting, but as one guest pointed out: "It's not authentically New England unless it's in some way uncomfortable."

Present and accounted for: Emerson descendant Sukey Forbes and her handsome companion, Kevin O'Leary, her cousin, Alec Emerson, the dryly witty Dan Elias and his kick-ass wife, Karen Keane, country squire Edward Garmey and the delightful Sophia, salty dog Peter Creighton and his lovely other half, Kitty, colonial historian Clem Benenson, architectural guardian Ted Landsmark and one man wearing the signature fork-tailed swallow tie from Trimingham's, the iconic Bermuda department store that closed in 2005.

The evening's most amusing exchange: Upon being introduced to someone, a man asked, "Oh, are you _____'s brother?" To which the other man replied, "That depends upon your dealings with him."

IN VINO VERITAS

One of the city's most scintillating and quintessential summer shindigs is the Dock Party to benefit the Esplanade Association, held at Community Boating. A uniformly attractive crowd in their summery best gathered on the edge of the Charles for cocktails and a BBQ while a spectacular sunset unfolded over the Salt and Pepper Bridge.

Present and accounted for: the always delightful Kristine Glynn, cuteness personified Jodi Wolin, Charley (aka Curly) Aldrich and his fiancée, Meg Thomas, the unfairly attractive Paul and Pia Miller, preppy pair Regina and Jonathan Winslow, adorable lovebirds Carolina Save and Bryan Natale, Venezuelan beauty Gabriela Santos and her other half, Camilo Gutierrez, the lovely Karen Lachmayr, Beacon Hillion Jason Winmill and so on and so forth.

The sailboats on the water made for a picturesque backdrop, while the wine and the company were equally intoxicating. The evening's most amusing remark: "The thing I like best about sailing is that drinking is pretty much mandatory." ◆

A HIP HUB

IT WAS THREE YEARS AGO THAT GQ DUBBED Boston the country's worst-dressed city. I scoffed then, and the sentiment hasn't gotten any better with age: Especially at this time of year, it's rare that I go a day without seeing someone whose sense of style makes me pause on the street for a second look. High fashion houses have taken notice of our passion for fashion too. Consider: This fall will see brand-new Boston outposts from Bottega Veneta and Dolce & Gabbana. And this spring, Women's Wear Daily reported that Boston is one of the top five American markets for Hermès. (NYC didn't even make the cut.) So it's no surprise the brand is expanding its Back Bay boutique, following in the presumably stilettoed footsteps of Chanel and Valentino, which both unveiled updates to their Newbury Street showplaces in recent months.

You'll certainly see some standout designer pieces in our lead fashion spread, which has Lydia Santangelo transporting fall trends from the runway to Groton's bucolic Barn at Gibbet Hill. But there are plenty of other sources of inspiration in this issue as well. Alexandra Cavallo looks at a local initiative that's bringing scientists and indie designers together for a most unusual runway show, featuring fashions inspired by everything from nanotechnology to neuroplasticity to the budding wings of fruit fly larvae. Santangelo takes stylish shoes for gents out for a spin in a classic car, while Alix Childs rounds up chic backpacks that are clearly too cool for school. Meanwhile, Meghan Kavanaugh interviews a 79-year-old local fashion icon about a new exhibit honoring her singular style. And I'm looking forward to glimpsing yours one of these fall days.

THE LAB COMES TO THE CATWALK. »

BEAKER CHIC: Candice Wu's design was inspired by Christopher Gibson's research.

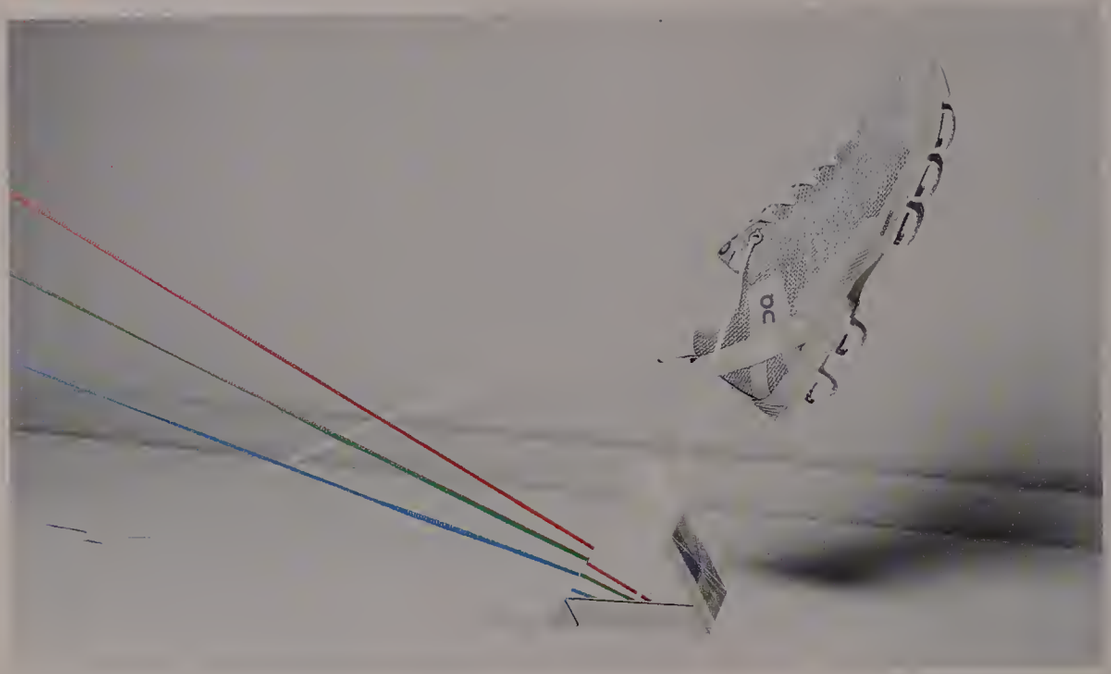
THE SCIENCE OF STYLE

WHEN FASHION DESIGN AND MEDICAL RESEARCH MEET, IT'S PURE CHEMISTRY. / Alexandra Cavallo

Check out all the Descience collaborations at fashiondescience.com.

"Do Eddie Bauer wrinkle-free dress shirts count as fashionable?" jokes Christopher Gibson, a Utah-based bioengineer who admits he knew next to nothing about fashion—until, that is, he signed on for Descience, a project that's teamed up designers and scientists for unique collaborations.

"That's precisely why I was attracted to this project: to understand a world I know little about," says Gibson, who paired with Boston-based designer Candice Wu to create a design reflecting her vision and his research. Wu, in turn, knew nothing about Cerebral Cavernous Malformation (CCM), the rare genetic disorder that's the subject of Gibson's work. But now funding CCM research is a cause she holds dear. "You can imagine the loneliness of having a disease that most people have never heard of, that has no treatment and that is not even being studied," she says.



Together, Gibson and Wu form Team OrphaCure, one of 61 duos whose designs will hit the runway in a Sept. 29 competition at the MIT Media Lab. "The collaboration was really more about asking each other questions and watching the other work," Gibson says. The result: a striking red dress that emulates blood vessels and is adorned with 3-D-printed appliqués. "The final product is true to the science; the textures and colors have direct inspiration from the images I work with in the lab on a daily basis," Gibson says. "But Candice was also able to embody much of the dichotomy of fear and hope that is a part of life for so many patients with rare diseases and their families."

For her part, Wu was touched by the response of the CCM community, especially on the part of one girl who's spent all her 16 years in a wheelchair due to the debilitating disease. "She is a typical teenager, full of life, but battling a devastating genetic condition," Wu says. "After Chris and I posted an inspiration board on Instagram, she immediately became one of our followers and shared her story."

Her story and others helped shape the design of Team OrphaCure's garment, which is competing for a $3,000 prize, to be divided between the two winning collaborators. But regardless of the outcome, Gibson feels the project has been a success. "The dress has a bit of a mysterious quality, and I find that to be so relevant to the study of rare genetic diseases," he says. "From a scientific perspective, this work helps us scientists, who sometimes do a poor job of telling the world why and how we do things. I feel incredibly lucky because I've had the chance to be a part of two seemingly disconnected worlds coming together, and the result is that we will have informed many new people about the power of both fashion and science."

Swiss Kicks

Smart Swiss design doesn't stop at Swatches and pocketknives. Consider these sneakers designed by Thilo Alex Brunner for Swiss shoe brand On, on view as part of Excellent Swiss Design, an exhibit running from Sept. 10 through Nov. 22 at MassArt's Sandra and David Bakalar Gallery. "The On sneaker not only looks great but is extremely pioneering," says Lisa Tung, MassArt's director of curatorial programs. "It has a patented hollow-core sole that allows the runner to have a soft landing yet enables a hard 'push off.'" Like the rest of the featured designs, the sneaks are a selection from the Design Prize Switzerland, which gives props to innovations in fashion, interior design and other creative fields—so expect to see everything from compostable furniture to E-Broidery textiles embedded with LEDs and solar cells. Says Tung: "One could imagine some great Halloween costumes made out of it!" / Jacqueline Houton

Purveyors: Corner this Market

Call it SoWa West. Unexpectedly located between medical office buildings and the Brookline Village T station is the Brookline Market Hall, a Thursday/Friday/Saturday display house and shop for local artists. The clean, bright space features a well-chosen mix of products and styles—from inspired housewares, like an armchair upholstered in aquatic prints and ceramic bowls in shades of leafy green and deep blue, to upcycled accents such as arched candleholders fashioned from faucet handles that are just begging for a windowsill perch. / Elizabeth Bomze

MIX AND MATCH: The three-day-a-week market boasts an eclectic range of charming home furnishings and decor.

TIMELESS STYLE: Cellucci has been in the fashion biz for decades.

Style stor Yalondo Cellucci has spent decades helping women look fabulaus, first at her legendory nomesoke shop and bridol boutique in Woltham, and naw as a personol shopper for Neiman Marcus. WHAT CAN WE EXPECT FROM THE EXHIBIT? We're very excited to have a chance ta display some gowns that were originals from Bob Mackie, Oscar de la Renta—top, top designers in the caun-try when glamour was at its highest. We were doing business in the late '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s, and our collection was exquisite. Most of the gowns you'll see are one-of-a-kinds that we had done far shows.

DO YOU HAVE A FAVORITE MEMORY FROM YOUR CAREER? I started out sell-ing wigs aut of the trunk of my car, and then I started doing wigs for can-cer patients.... I'd get letters after that said, "Oh, thank you. I was able to walk down the aisle proudly with my fam-ily and look good for that day." Those special moments mean more ta me than anything.

YOUR 80TH BIRTHDAY BASH IS COM-ING UP. DO YOU KNOW WHAT YOU'LL BE WEARING? My daughter Sandra Celli, wha does My Big Fat American Gypsy Wedding, she's designing samething far me.... I know it's going to be white, and it'll be loaded with crystals.

WHAT IS YOUR SECRET TO GLAMOUR? I dan't think it's just the hairstyle ar just the makeup. I think it's the whole atti-tude. Play up your best assets. Just make sure when you buy clathes, [they] suit you, not because it's a trend, because you want to feel glamaraus and special. That little touch of glitter adds the glamour. I think what I'm try-ing to say is, glitter makes it happen.... I've always been into rhinestones and glitter. It didn't have to be diamands, as lang as it has some kind of shine. Even my kitchen cabinets are shiny.

IN THE PINK

After years of intensive therapy, all indications suggest that Americans have finally overcome their severe rosé phobia. Fact: France drinks more of the pink stuff than the white. Fact: Rosé is now assuming its rightful place at the table and bar as a year-round drink option in the U.S. Once stereotyped as just a déclassé seasonal thirst quencher, the wine is now known for its versatility with food. As with any other style, category or color of wine though, there are the good ones, the bad ones and the vast sea of boring ones in the middle. These three are among the seriously good. / Sandy Block

CAVES D'ESCLANS "WHISPERING ANGEL," CÔTES DE PROVENCE ROSÉ, 2013
Celebrity winemaker Sacha Lichine has quite a pedigree, having grown up at Margaux's famed Chateau Prieure-Lichine. He's enlisted Patrick Leon, longtime oenologist at Mouton-Rothschild, to craft this pale, fuller bodied rosé from grenache and other Provencal grapes. An elegant wine, it shows tangerine and cherry notes, with hints of rose petal, white pepper and anise. This bolder rosé is an ideal match for grilled salmon.
$24, Brix Wine Shop, Boston

ARTAZURI GARNACHA ROSADO, NAVARRA, 2013
From grapes grown 1,500 feet up in the Pyrenees foothills of northern Spain, this wine is made by renowned Rioja producer Juan Carlos Lopez de Lacalle of Vina Artadi. Made with 100 percent garnacha grapes, it has a vibrant coral hue, with engaging strawberry-like flavor, floral scents and crisp acids. Charming, fresh and very bright, this is a super choice to serve before dinner or with a seafood salad.
$13, The Wine Emporium, Boston

M. CHAPOUTIER "BELLERUCHE" CÔTES DU RHÔNE ROSÉ, 2013
Quality fanatic Michel Chapoutier rarely misfires, and this classic blend of grenache, syrah and cinsault squarely hits the bull's-eye. Dry as a bone, it delivers earthy, herb-accented flavors with a hint of pepper. It's a great complement to a caprese salad, especially right now with the last of the season's tomatoes.

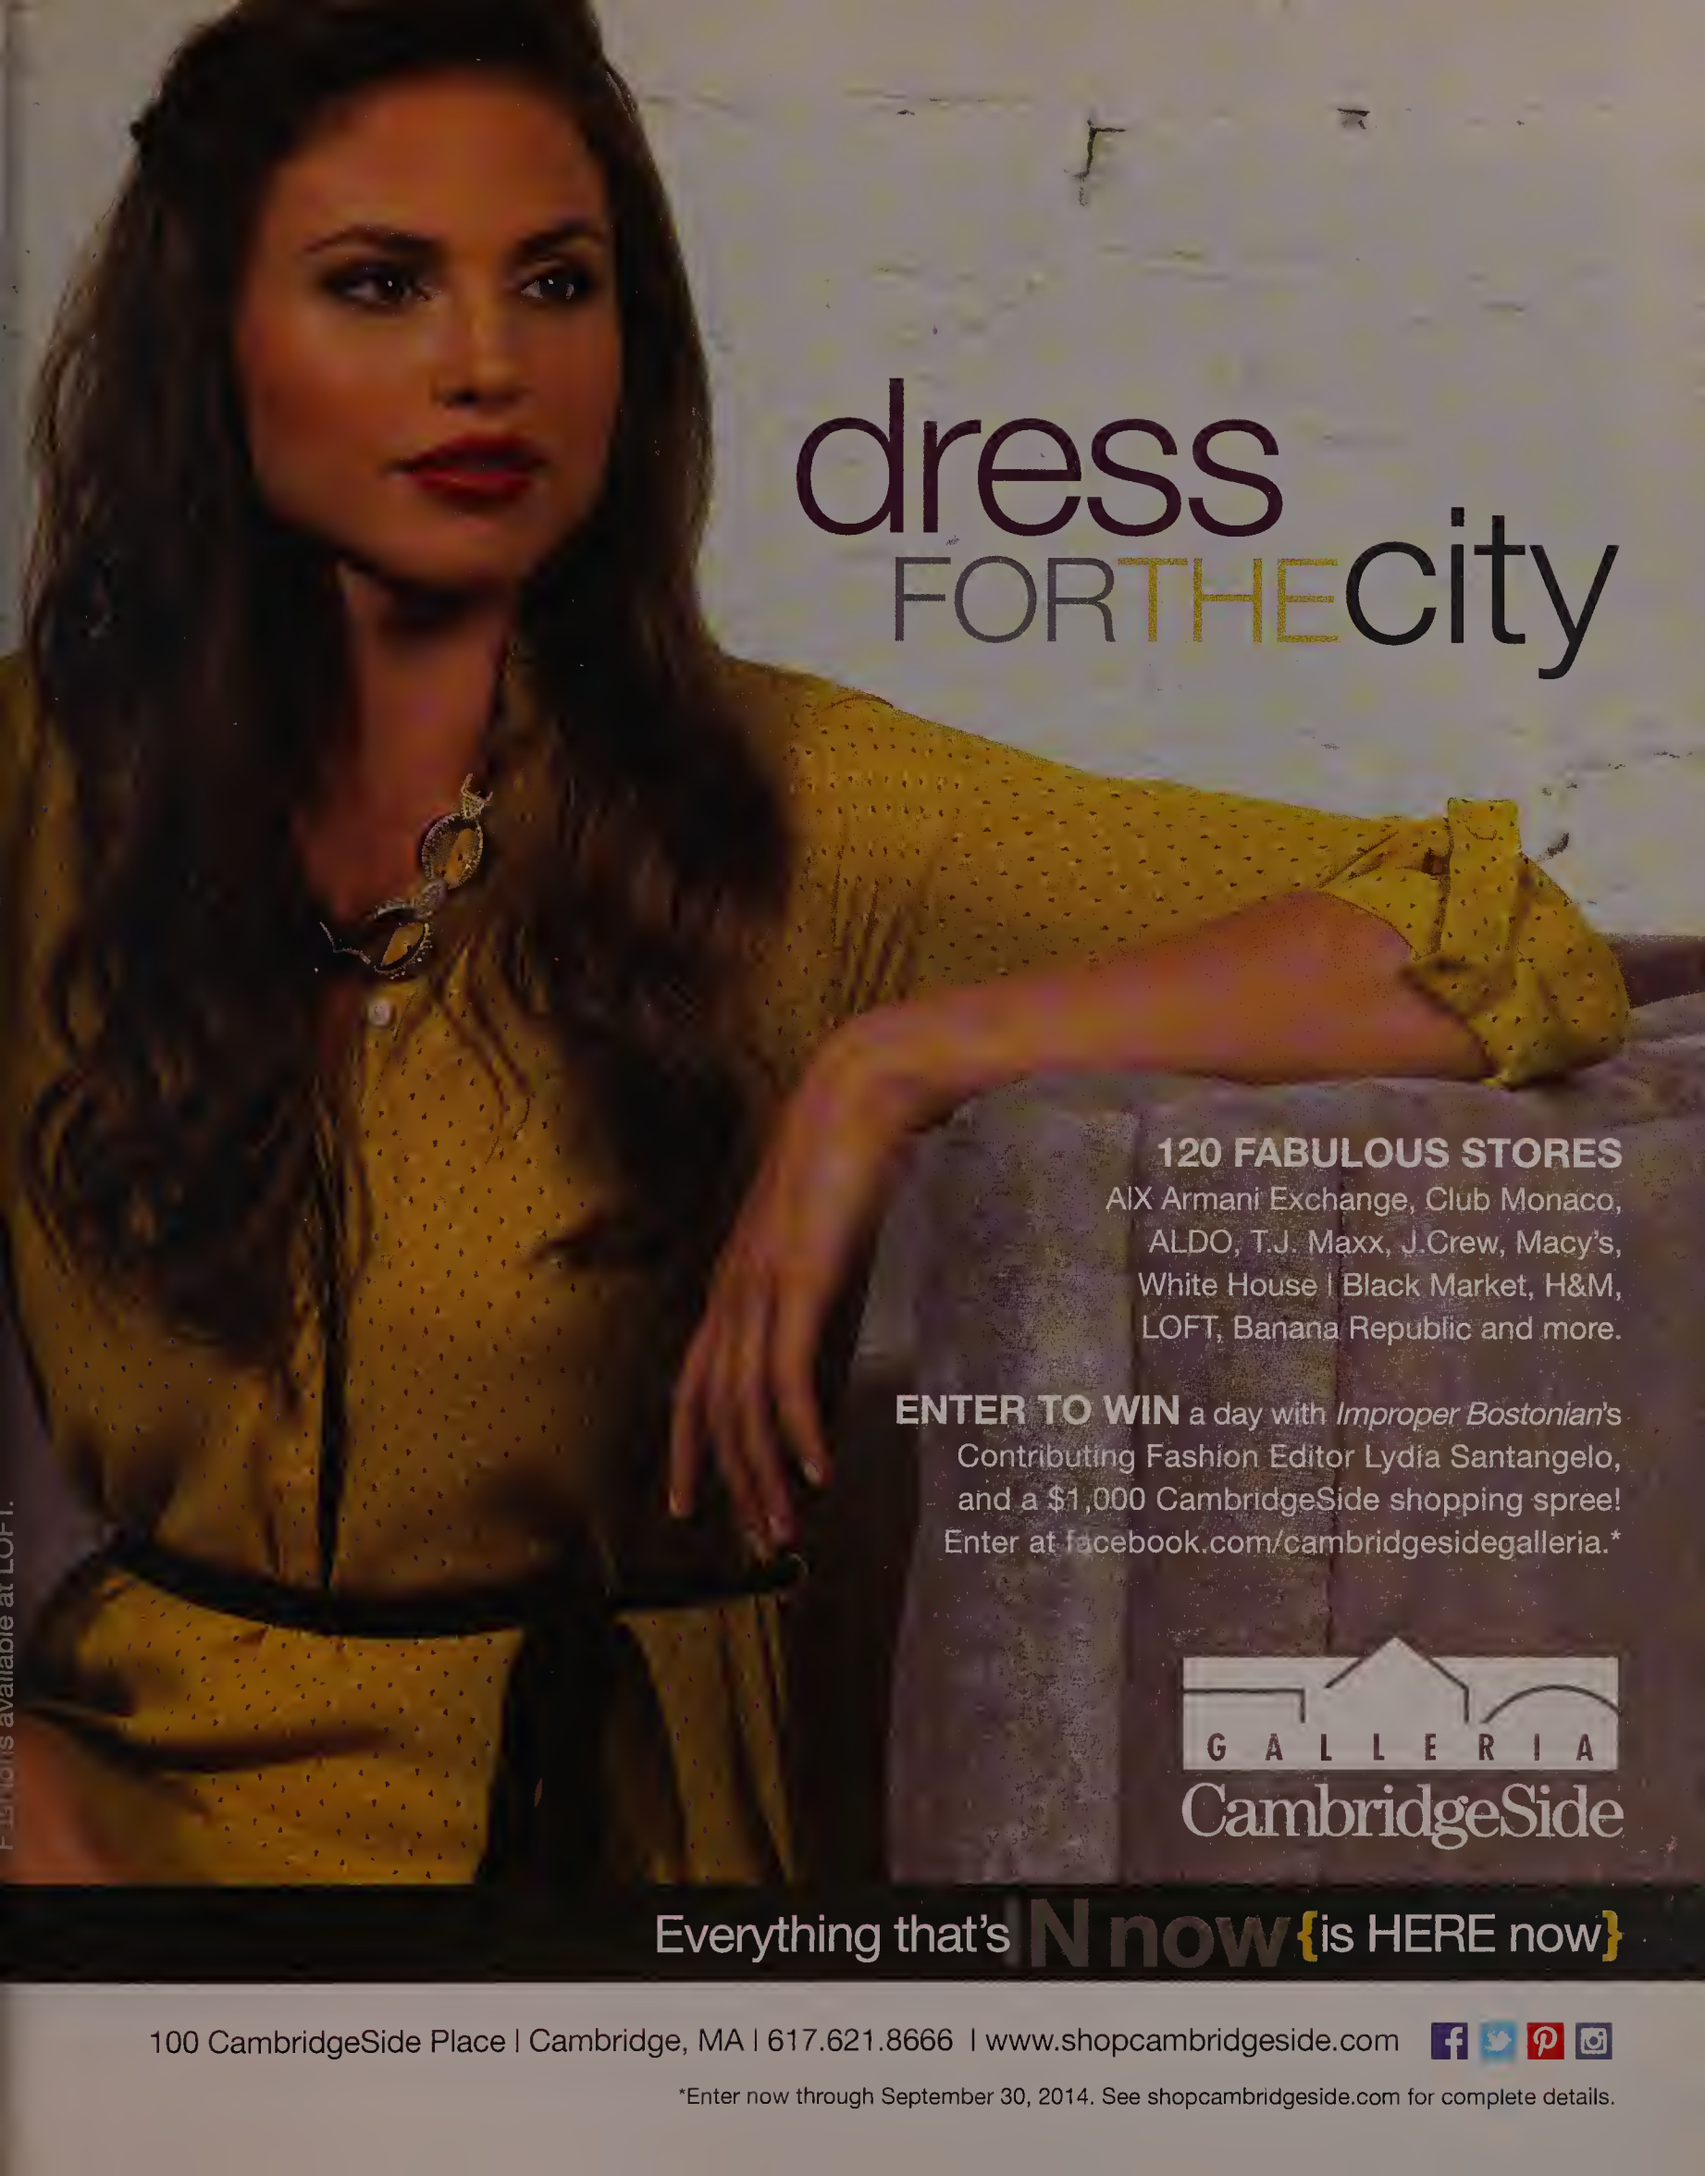
BEAUTY AND THE BELLYACHER

TO THE GIRL IN THE HARVARD SQUARE FEDEX THURSDAY EVENING: Thank you for helping me with the new tape dispensers. I wish I had said more to you before you left. Your eyes were amazing. Your hair was up and uncombed, yet all I could see was beauty. My imagination went next to the thought of you with your long hair down and wearing a beautiful fitted blue dress to bring out your eyes. I'm hoping you go there often so I can see you again. It's not often that you see a woman who shows beauty no matter what she wears and without even trying.

— Stuck on you

DEAR BACKPACKERS: To the people of Boston and beyond who crowd onto the T wearing backpacks that extend three feet behind them: You're in a city, not a sierra. Remove your backpacks upon entering the train and make room for someone else. And to the girl on the E train at the Prudential stop: I hope you're still dizzy from being spun like a top when I had to shove your backpack to exit.

— Surly about satchels



TO A COURTEOUS CANTABRIGIAN: Thank you ever so much to the kind person who returned my EBT card and $100 bill to the people at Shaw's in Porter Square. You are wonderful, and I will always be grateful for your trustworthiness. Your act of kindness was a brilliant shining star in what has been a difficult time for me. You are restoring my faith in people.

— Satisfied shopper

TO MUTTS ON THE MBTA: The next hipster who brings his/her dog onto a Red Line train is going to be humiliated within an inch of your shallow ego until you and your pooch both get off the train with your self-important tails between your legs. Unless your pup is a service animal, keep it off the train. I cannot begin to fathom where you get this sense of entitlement. Dumb bitches.

BALANCED MEALS: Modern and traditional Italian fare share space on Bel Ari's menu.

Bel Ari

ROLLING ON

BEL ARI IS PRIMED FOR ITS OFFICIAL DEBUT.

Robert Fathman has opened 11 restaurants in his career, but he's never experienced anything quite like what's gone into opening Bel Ari.

After Mark Tosi and Anthony Botta bought Sorriso from Ian Just in January, the restaurant stayed open while Fathman began to change the menu. Then came some tinkering to service before the physical overhaul began in July. The Leather District spot has stayed open during most of the renovations, and now it's slated to officially open under the Bel Ari moniker on Sept. 10.

"It's a business and our goal was not to have to shut down for any length of time," says Fathman, the executive chef at Bel Ari and neighborhood sibling Les Zygomates. "It allowed us to share the experience of our renovation with our customers."

Sorriso's customers have been getting a hint of what the Bel Ari menu will look like. The portions have been scaled back, but the flavors have been enhanced, with Fathman at the helm of a kitchen that's primarily whipping up modern and classic Italian cuisine at prices mostly under $30. Dishes such as pan-seared scallops with squash puree, pancetta, onions and truffle share space on the menu with spinach pizza and a bevy of handmade pastas. Fathman also names some standout sfizi (bar snacks): lamb meatballs with goat cheese, roasted shishito peppers with olive oil, and whipped ricotta with honey and pistachios.

At the bar, Karen Small is using many of the kitchen's ingredients to carve out the cocktail list. A touch of microbasil inspired her to make her version of a basilico (gin, fresh-squeezed grapefruit juice, ginger beer, simple syrup and basil muddled with burnt sugar). "I want to make sure it accentuates the flavors," Small says. "I don't want to have a syrupy, girly drink with bronzino."

The revamped menu accompanies changes to the restaurant's ambience. A glass communal table now graces the front window, while large maroon banquettes line the wall leading to the back dining area. The walls—previously adorned by a mural—are now eggshell-colored and decked with works from local artist Janice Eve Dale. New tabletops and light fixtures will help contemporize the space, Fathman says.

"It's kind of neat. Every night, the trades come in and do a little something else," he says. "One day they'll tear out the wine rack and redo the wall, or put in a new hostess desk or a new table. We closed for a weekend, and they painted the ceiling and went all the way down to the floor."

Aside from keeping up with the busy lunch crowd, Fathman sees another advantage to the "rolling renovation," which he plans to also oversee at Les Zygomates shortly after Bel Ari opens. It allows for continuity with the staff.

"Nobody has to take any time off. The people in the kitchen are all hardworking guys, and if we closed down for a bunch of weeks, they're not in the position to hang around," Fathman says. And he knows the entire staff will be in the right spot when it comes time for the official changeover: "We're going to be standing ready for a stampede of people going through that door."

EARLS COMES TO TOWN

O, CANADA: An upscale Edmonton chain arrives in New England.

You say you haven't heard of Earls Kitchen + Bar? Then you're probably not from Canada. Leroy Earl Fuller and his son Stanley Earl Fuller opened the first Earls—a basic beer-and-burger joint—in Edmonton back in 1982. Today, the business (still family-owned and -run) boasts more than 60 locations—59 in Canada. The first foray into New England is set to begin Sept. 12 at Assembly Row in Somerville, and Earls has high hopes to be seen as more than simply a chain restaurant.

Much of the menu—composed of chicken Caesar salad, burgers and steaks—is what you'd expect from an "upscale casual restaurant." And there's a smattering of world cuisine: crispy tuna sushi cone with tempura crunch, chicken tacos, Thai shrimp and Mediterranean calamari. But Earls aims to exceed expectations by featuring an executive chef (Tim Pennington), a scratch kitchen, ingredients from local purveyors and menu items specifically designed for New England.

The cocktail program, under the direction of Cameron Bogue, uses only fresh-squeezed juices and handmade syrups. Customers can expect some of the drinks to come in playful glasses, such as the Bees Knees cocktail, which arrives in a honey-bear-shaped glass. The Earls Old Fashioned (Maker's Mark, demerara sugar and root beer bitters) is especially tempting.

GOOD SHEPARD

Construction has begun at the former Chez Henri in Cambridge on the forthcoming Susan Regis/Rene Becker project. Although the restaurant was initially christened Foret, it has been renamed Shepard, as in Shepard Street off Mass. Ave., which is, logically enough, the restaurant's location. "Foret was proving to be a pronunciation challenge already," Regis says. And when will Shepard open? "The time frame is now early fall," she says.

Good Eats: A Big Deal

It's called big plate chicken (or dapanji), and until last month it was all but impossible to find in this area. Enter Chef Chang's in Back Bay, the new tenant of the former Wine Cellar space, which specializes in Sichuan and Northern Chinese cuisine. It makes a classic version of this hearty Uighur stew that includes knobby bone-in chunks of ultra-tender chicken with rough-cut potatoes, onions and bell peppers. The soy-based sauce isn't very hot, but it's warmly spiced with cumin, cinnamon, star anise and Sichuan peppercorns. Best of all, there's a tangle of chewy wheat noodles underneath to soak it all up. / Elizabeth Bomze

Brush Strokes of Genius

Now in its fourth installment, Boston Calling is experimenting with new ways to involve the community. So organizers put out a call for art for their Blank Canvas contest, which challenged local artists to create a mural design to be displayed at the fest come Sept. 5. The five winning murals share a common theme: love for music and this city. We asked four of the artists about their inspirations—musical or otherwise. / Alexandra Cavallo

1. Kyle Hebert, 26, graphic designer

"Remember when every blonk convos, whether it be the walls of yaur bedraom or the soles of your shoes, was cavered with the artists and musicians thot you loved?"

2. Eric Byers, 19, student

"While creating this specific design I happened to be listening ta my current favorite artist, Cherub. [My inspirotian] can best be summarized by the connection thot the festivol creates between the city and its people."

3. Michelle Stevens, 17, student

"The playlist going as I worked was heavily the Vaccines, the 1975, Sam Smith, the Pillowmen and Bleachers. When it gets ta be really late at night, as I'm working I've been putting 'Solt' by Bad Suns and the Knocks' remix of 'Girls' by the 1975 on repeat."

4. Corey Corcoran, 28, admissions counselor

"In hammering out the design far the murol, I listened to the new album by the War on Drugs to try to plug into the spirit of Boston Colling. [And] really, I've always wanted an excuse ta draw a duck boot!"

FALL BACK

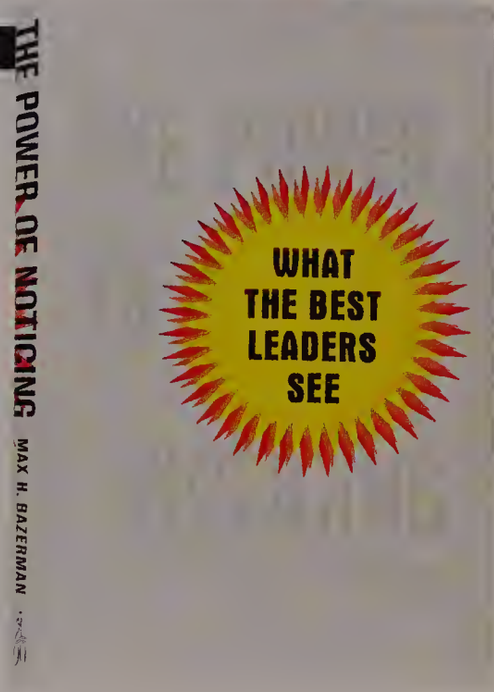
EYES WIDE OPEN



A GUIDE TO MAKING BETTER DECISIONS—AND AVERTING DISASTER

The Power of Noticing* by Max H. Bazerman
Published by Simon & Schuster, 240 pages, $28
The author is the co-director of the Center for Public Leadership at the Harvard Kennedy School.

THIS BOOK IS SUBTITLED "WHAT THE BEST Leaders See," but Bazerman focuses on what leaders all too often do not see, even when the elephant in the room is wearing a fluorescent pantsuit. He cites "predictable surprises" such as the danger of the Mississippi Delta, known but fatefully unattended to before Katrina struck. And he presents spectacular disasters—the Challenger disintegration, the subprime mortgage catastrophe, the Bernie who made off with $64.8 billion in investors' money—vividly describing small ways leaders start to lie, or deny, and slither down slippery slopes.

While exploring these case studies, Bazerman outlines strategies for avoiding such perils and becoming more aware of the information that surrounds us: thinking one step ahead, using a wider lens, putting ourselves in the other (possibly scheming) party's shoes, and employing skepticism or even a pinch of cynicism. He notes potentially problematic imbalances between external attributions—the many ways we say, "It's not my job," or blame forces beyond our control—and internal ones. And he stresses the importance of noticing indirect effects, such as discrimination against qualified Asian-American candidates by colleges that prioritize legacy applicants. The teachings are refreshingly useful; the horror stories behind them, alas, are fascinating.

FROM PAGE 70: Magicians are hardly unique at using misdirection to get you to see what they want you to see (and nothing more); they are just the most entertaining example.... To succeed at their craft, magicians need to fool everyone most of the time. But people in many other fields and professions can succeed at their work simply by misdirecting most of the people most of the time. ◆

If you're lingering in Pézenas, consider a stay at Hôtel de Vigniamont, a small luxury inn with flower-filled courtyards and a generous breakfast buffet with homemade jams.

For an experience right out of a Monet painting, book lunch or dinner on a riverboat cruise down the beautiful, tree-lined Canal du Midi.

WINE AND DINE: Visit the Languedoc while its treasures remain under the radar.

The Escape Artist / Victoria Abbott Riccardi

FORGO THE RIVIERA IN FAVOR OF AN OENOPHILE'S HAVEN IN SOUTHERN FRANCE.

TELL PEOPLE YOU'RE HEADED TO THE Languedoc for a vacation, and they'll either smile knowingly or scratch their heads. That's because this southern region of France with a blossoming wine culture remains relatively undiscovered, which is just fine for those who treasure cozy mountain villages, oyster-rich seaside towns and small wineries—all overlooked by the masses flocking to the flashy French Riviera on the other side of the Rhône.

The Languedoc may be a hidden gem now, but the route there couldn't be easier. After flying to Paris, you hop on a quick 90-minute flight to Montpellier and—voilà—you've arrived. You'll want to rent a car to explore wine country, which right now offers a striking mix of cobalt skies, silver-green olive groves, golden light and russet-orange vineyards.

What's new about the Languedoc is the quality of its wines—reds and whites, sweet and sparkling. Historically, the region was known for growing grapes and producing inexpensive quaffers. Then, about a dozen years ago, some renegades decided the region could do better. Taking advantage of the Languedoc's diverse soils and weather patterns, these vintners began producing excellent wines using traditional and imported varietals, like grenache noir and gewürztraminer, respectively.

A perfect place to taste some of these new Languedoc wines is Domaines Paul Mas in the commune of Montagnac, about 45 minutes by car from Montpellier. Fourth-generation owner/winemaker Jean-Claude Mas—one of the pioneers of this new wine movement—founded his multi-estate enterprise in 2000, starting with the Mas family's own centuries-old estate.

Upon your arrival, head to the tasting room, where the English-speaking staff will pour some of the 100 or so beautifully crafted wines, ranging from rich, spicy reds, like the Paul Mas Estate Carignan Vieilles Vignes, to elegant whites, such as La Forge Estate Chardonnay. Fill your glass again over lunch or dinner at the upstairs Côté Mas restaurant while sampling local specialties, like sizzling foie gras, juicy lamb with garden vegetables and regional cheeses, such as Roquefort.

Should that pungent blue be a favorite, you can visit the cheese's namesake town, about an hour by car from Montpellier in the heart of the Pyrenees. The brand Société offers a nice little tour, which includes a film explaining how Roquefort is made, a trot through the company's chilly cellars (bring a jacket!) and a final tasting.

No trip to the Languedoc is complete without a visit to the coast, and in particular to the area of Étang de Thau famous for its oysters. You'll find some of the best at La Palourdière in the commune of Bouzigues, where you can sit on the terrace overlooking miles of rope-grown oyster farms while slurping up the meaty bivalves with some cold, citrusy picpoul, a white varietal commonly grown in the nearby vineyards.

For a taste of history to pair with all that wine, visit the charming town of Pézenas, once host to raucous medieval festivals and now home to a fabulous Saturday open market. The old town brims with 17th- and 18th-century homes that retain their vaulted ceilings, mullioned windows and elaborate ironwork, as well as winding cobbled paths dotted with cafes, boutiques and craft shops selling traditionally made goods like hand-tooled leather belts. The playwright Molière spent several years in Pézenas; pick up the pamphlet at the Tourist Office, and you can follow in his footsteps on a self-guided walking tour.

Here's another point of history, one few people know: France's first sparkling wine was not Champagne, but Blanquette de Limoux. Benedictine monks in the abbey of Saint-Hilaire near Carcassonne were making it back in 1531, nearly a century before the advent of the better-known bubbly. Expect to see more of this supremely elegant yet affordable wine—along with other Languedoc offerings—popping up in stores and on restaurant menus here in the U.S. And it seems likely that 20 years from now, the Languedoc will be as familiar to visitors as the Rhône and Loire wine regions have become. So explore the fruits of this gorgeous landscape now, while it still lies in happy anonymity. ◆

A CHARMING BANDBOX BRINGS CREATIVITY TO THE NORTH END.

230 Hanover St., Boston (617-367-2824)

OF THE MULTITUDE OF RESTAURANTS IN Boston's North End, perhaps 80 percent serve a very square rendition of Italian-American fare. One can imagine sailing down Hanover Street on a raft of garlic bread over a river of marinara, past islets of fried calamari and cheese-capped mountains of breaded cutlets. There's good reason so few places stray from this formula: Folks come here to be comforted with the familiar, not challenged. So give credit to the tiny new Parla. On the most culinarily conservative boulevard in Boston, it serves Italian cuisine that appears to have beamed in from another planet—or at least a future where food dehydrators are commonplace.

Chef Eric Buonagurio gleaned some flashy technique from former boss Jason Santos at Blue Inc.: He shares Santos' penchant for intricate platings, Asian flavors and modernist tools like handheld smokers. A small plate of pork belly ($7) nests four slabs of roasted Korabuta belly atop black-pepper aioli and dusts them with smoked salt, nuggets of dehydrated lime juice and nasturtium flowers. That clearly ain't Italian, but certainly is delicious. Smoked scallop shish kebab ($3.50) skewers a fat smoked scallop with a disk of bacon and a cube of roasted pineapple; again, it's of uncertain provenance but inarguably scrumptious. Other piatti piccoli are more recognizably Italian(-American), like fine, crisp arancini ($9) filled with delectable braised oxtail and peas, flanked by good roasted-tomato marinara; quality but stingily portioned salume ($5), recently a few thin slices of Calabrese salami with olive oil powder; and lovely, tender wild boar meatballs ($9) with red sauce and shaved parmesan.

A salad of baby octopus ($13) is an unqualified success, with wee, miso-marinated heads and tentacles atop thin-sliced pickled cucumber and flecks of tobiko; dip into the liquid dots on the plate's rim for faint accents of Thai basil and squid ink. Heirloom tomato caprese ($11) is graced by good burrata and artful smears of hyssop pesto and black-garlic puree, but marred by inexplicably ordinary late-summer tomatoes. Summer vegetable salad ($10) offers no disappointment: Its mix of baby greens, sweet peppers, strawberry-balsamic dressing and excellent smoked blue cheese is less inventive but more successful.

Larger plates similarly alternate between ravishing and puzzlingly ordinary. Lobster ravioli ($27) features serviceable house-made ravioli in cauliflower puree with wild mushrooms and pea greens, but I expected some lobster meat to be stuffed into the ravioli, not just lying atop it. By contrast, ramen noodle "carbonara" ($23) is terrific, an Italianate take on Japanese alkaline-noodle soup, with superb slabs of pork belly, a soft-poached egg and bitter broccoli rabe in a dashi broth endowed with deep, salty flavor by guanciale. Lamb leg fettuccine ($22) is wonderful in an entirely different way: Its chewy housemade pasta ribbons swim in an earthy, rich ragù of braised lamb leg, English peas and wild mushrooms. Local striped bass ($28) boasts a beautifully cooked fillet arrayed gorgeously atop black quinoa, framed with green beans and topped with artichoke relish. Picture-pretty, it's layered with intriguing tastes of saffron aioli and citrus pudding.

The short dessert menu offers a mad-scientist take on s'mores ($7): smoked vanilla ice cream, a smear of chocolate sauce, chocolate-mint ganache cubes, kiss-shaped marshmallows flavored with pink peppercorns and piles of granulated graham crackers, served under a dome lifted tableside to release—voila!—a cloud of wood smoke. It's goofy, high-concept fun.

The pocket-sized room kitschily evokes a Prohibition-era speakeasy with Deco signage, framed period newspapers, Edison bulbs and reclaimed wood, though I doubt many actual speakeasies featured cushy leather banquettes or French windows. But the bar program is one of the North End's most interesting, eking the most out of a beer/wine/cordial license. The Atlantic City Smash ($10) house-infuses Barr Hill gin with lemongrass and kaffir lime, then adds lime juice, basil and good tonic: a bracing summer refresher. And the Pistolero Fizz ($12) mixes smoky crema de mescal with allspice dram liqueur, lemon, honey and egg white, like a Ramos Fizz in a Tiki hut on a Mexican beach.

The short, affordable wine list—28 bottles, plus 16 by the glass—features food-friendly whites like Sicily's 2012 Mandrarossa fiano ($9/$34), all peaches and lemons, and the ruby-red 2012 Hofstatter Meczan pinot nero ($11/$42) from Trentino, with its whiff of smoked cherries. Beer drinkers will appreciate the tight list of 15 bottles and two drafts focused on small American craft brewers. The tiny front-of-house staff admirably juggles hosting, serving and bartending duties, though the precision mixology can be a service bottleneck if the whole room is drinking cocktails. But both waitstaff and kitchen work hard enough to make the occasional pacing problem or dull dish forgivable. In a neighborhood with wan standards for inventiveness, it's no great trick for Parla to shine. ◆

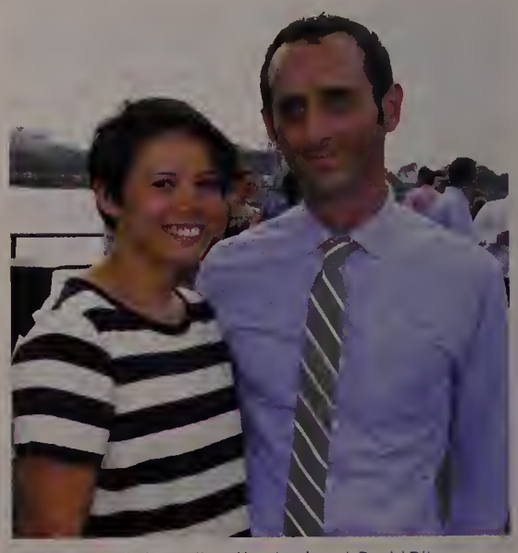
HIGHLIGHTS FROM HIGH SOCIETY

➜ The Constitution Yacht Club hosted its inaugural Barefoot Regatta at the Courageous Sailing Center on Aug. 9. Sixty-six sailboats competed in a 13.4-mile race across Boston Harbor, followed by the Gosling's Tent Party, where crews joined party guests for supper, music and awards. More than 600 people raised more than $10,000 to benefit Boston-area nonprofit sailing organizations.



➜ Courageous Sailing held its 18th annual Make-a-Mark gala on July 15 at its Charlestown Navy Yard headquarters. More than 500 guests gathered at Pier 4 for music, catered food and silent and live auctions. The evening raised more than $125,000 to support youth programming and scholarships for children learning to sail.

2. Laura Baughman, assistant brand manager at Gosling's Rum, and Emily Watterworth, recent graduate of New England School of Law

3. Sandra Kelly, office manager at Liberty Construction, and Kristine Barry, owner of Babes Bootcamp

4. Cha-Ling O'Connell and her husband, David DiLorenzo, executive director of Courageous Sailing

4. Kevin Nelson, director of finance and planning for Boston University's Global Programs, and Lilla Curran, director of video operations at Weber Shandwick

ASK CHERYL

Q: MY LIPS ARE THIN AND I AM CONSIDERING HAVING THEM PLUMPED UP WITH FILLER; THOUGHTS?

A: Filler is a great way to enhance lips on either the top, bottom or both. The key is to take a conservative approach and to not overdo it. Make sure you select a well-trained physician or injector with lots of experience.

Fillers are composed of hyaluronic acid, a clear gel that is soft and pliable. Hyaluronic acid is a compound found naturally in our body so it is extremely safe. Lip injections actually don't hurt due to the fact that lidocaine, a numbing agent, is mixed into the syringe. You feel a little pinch, but that is it.

Your lips will look totally natural and the only person who will know you have had filler is you! (Unless you tell them.) The effect will last six to eighteen months and will wear off gradually. Don't be afraid to give it a try: the key is a conservative approach. The results can be stunning!

LIFE OF CRIME* ★★½

Movies / Brett Michel

THE LATEST ELMORE LEONARD ADAPTATION IS CRIMINALLY LACKING.

The latest in a long line of Elmore Leonard adaptations opens with a bang, but unfolds, sadly, with more of a whimper. During a pre-credit, cold opening of Life of Crime we get a hit-and-run look at how Louis Gara (John Hawkes) and Ordell Robbie (Yasiin Bey, aka Mos Def), a couple of small-time hoods, operate.

Ordell, who's learning his criminal trade under the tutelage of Louis, gets robbed of $27 and his $200 switchblade while peeing at a urinal inside the dingy bathroom at a dive bar. Heading outside to meet Louis in their van, Ordell tells his greasy-haired, mustachioed mentor that he was robbed by the beefy pimp who's now standing by the front door, bordered by two of his prostitutes. Louis prods the overly cautious, goateed Ordell to threaten the man—and if that doesn't work? "Run."

And run Ordell does. As the pimp chases Ordell past the van and down the Detroit street, it affords Louis the opportunity to run over the flesh peddler with his vehicle. Twice.

Little-known director Daniel Schechter then cuts to a country club party that serves to introduce platinum blond, drunken dirtbag Frank Dawson (Tim Robbins), his put-upon wife, Mickey (Jennifer Aniston), and wannabe philanderer Marshall Taylor (Will Forte, sporting a '70s 'stache and 'burns), who's hot for Mrs. Dawson. Frank's brandishing a huge golf trophy that he's clearly proud of—but not as proud as he is of his trophy wife. Or so it seems.

Daniel Schechter so desperately wants to infuse his movie with a '70s vibe—straight down to the funky music by the Newton Brothers—that he even falls back on a faux-optical title superimposed on top of an establishing shot of the party that announces the film's name, a change from The Switch, the title of the Leonard book the movie's based on. This is the first misstep that Schechter makes in his adaptation, which nevertheless has plenty of shaggy-dog charm. And the scruffiness suits Leonard's material just fine.

Not to mention, Schechter's casting choices are pretty damn good. True, Louis and Ordell might not have the screen heft of Robert De Niro and Samuel L. Jackson when they played older versions of the same characters in Jackie Brown, Quentin Tarantino's 1997 adaptation of Leonard's Rum Punch, but this is a smaller story—which is for the best, since Schechter isn't nearly as ambitious as Tarantino. Nor does he have the stylistic chops of the Pulp Fiction Oscar winner, or even Barry Sonnenfeld (director of the 1995 adaptation of Leonard's Get Shorty), and especially not Steven Soderbergh, who directed what still remains the greatest Leonard adaptation committed to celluloid, 1998's Out of Sight.

It'll look right at home on your TV, where it's destined to attract most of its fans during late-night runs on cable.

By default, this is the best Leonard adaptation captured digitally, a shooting decision that harms this movie's sense of place. As lensed by Eric Alan Edwards, it looks like every other crummy movie that's clogging up the cineplexes—meaning it'll look right at home on your TV, where it's destined to attract most of its fans during late-night runs on cable.

Louis and Ordell find their way into the apartment of Richard (Mark Boone Junior), a redneck with a taste for Nazi memorabilia. If it weren't for his lisp, you might easily mistake him for Jeff Bridges' iconic character, The Dude—until a mid-film mishap finds him requiring an eye patch, and thus looking more like Bridges' Rooster Cogburn. A sign in this racist's kitchen reads, "Nothing is lower than n------ or Jews, except the cops that protect them." This bearded idiot doesn't even seem to notice any irony in that fact that he's frying chicken for the black Ordell, or that he spends much of the movie disguising himself (badly) as a police officer, once the picture's main kidnapping plot kicks into gear.

Louis and Ordell plan on snatching Frank's socialite wife while he's out of town on business (the business of fraud and embezzlement, not to mention adultery) and then demanding a $1 million ransom from the louse. But what to do once they discover Frank filed divorce papers before flying to the Bahamas to hop in bed with his mistress (Isla Fisher)? Hell, why pay to get his wife back, if it means he'll never have to pay alimony?

And ultimately, there's not a lot to see here. Much of Leonard's dialogue remains intact, as a sweet interaction blossoms between Louis and Mickey, his infatuation becoming a sort of reverse-Stockholm syndrome. But there's really not a lot at stake, other than Louis trying to convince Ordell not to chop off Mickey's fingers.

And while there is a nice bit of turnabout at the end—it is a Leonard plot, after all—the rest of the picture lacks the precise comic beats that made other Leonard adaptations so memorable.

Leonard served as an executive producer on the picture, which premiered at last year's Toronto Film Festival, a month after his death. But despite the involvement of the author himself, Schechter's adaptation doesn't pop so much as gradually deflate. ◆

HUMAN TOUCH

FOLK-SCHOOLED BAY STATE NATIVE DANCES INTO ELECTRONIC WORLD.

ELECTRONIC DANCE MUSIC USUALLY reverberates with thick production and bone-rattling beats. But Sylvan Esso—the North Carolina duo of singer Amelia Meath and producer Nick Sanborn—exists in a dimension ruled by lightness and finesse.

"We were really interested in making human music that was electronic," Meath says. "Not accidentally letting machines we were working with write the music."

Part of that approach may stem from the duo's background, which stands apart from DJ culture. Sanborn played bass for psychedelic folk-rockers Megafaun, while Meath sang with Vermont's Appalachian-shaded female a cappella trio Mountain Man. Both groups are on hiatus while the two explore Sylvan Esso, a name inspired by the sylvan sprites in the video game Sword & Sworcery.

"Just because you dabble in one genre doesn't mean you can't necessarily go in any other different directions," says Meath, who grew up in Melrose and Cambridge. "I always wanted to make pop music, and write pop songs, and do something electronic—and mainly something that would make people dance."

The seeds of Sylvan Esso were sown in Sanborn's native Milwaukee when he opened for Mountain Man with his solo electro project Made of Oak in 2010. Meath asked him to remix her song "Play It Right," and it all clicked. She compares it to the feeling "when you hear a song on the radio and all of a sudden your hair is standing on end, and your heart is full, and everything is beautiful at the same time, like 'Oh, we should work together 'cause it feels right.'"

After Mountain Man toured as Feist's backup singers, Meath relocated to Sanborn's current base of Durham, N.C., where they recorded Sylvan Esso's eponymous May debut. Meath, however, was hesitant to let him sample and loop her vocals. "You're so in control of your voice when you're a singer, and then all of a sudden, here's this f---ing upstart who's hooked you up to a machine and can make you sound different," she says. "So initially, my reaction was to freak out and be very protective of what was going on. And that lasted about 10 minutes."

"That's how I learned to sing, singing along to the radio, 'cause that's what my dad would do."

Her trust was well-founded, as Sanborn wields a sympathetic hand at his outpost of synthesized knobs and buttons, connected to a laptop and drum machine. He touches on both dubstep and electro-pop while letting Meath fly as a mostly organic foil to balance the duo's airy dynamics with empathy and emotion.

"We're a very intuitive band," Meath says from an Arizona tour stop. "Luckily we were able to find each other, because it's quite easy for us to just riff off of what the other is doing."

That's immediately clear on Sylvan Esso's enchanting debut, where looped vocals and handclaps give way to elastic electro-bass pulses that drop in opening track "Hey Mami." One can sense Meath levitating to the nursery-rhyme bounce of "H.S.K.T.," an acronym for "Head, Shoulders, Knees and Toes." Likewise, dancing inspired "Coffee," where dreamy ricochets float into the "My baby does the hanky panky" chorus of the '60s pop gem popularized by Tommy James and the Shondells. "Just by mentioning a song that's already established in people's canon," she says, "you're including all the different meanings of that into the song you're singing."

The standards that first drew Meath to singing came from the Who, Foreigner and ABBA during car rides with her father, Jonathan, a children's television producer (Where in the World Is Carmen Sandiego?) and professional Santa Claus.

"We had a big purple Mazda with an oddly good sound system for the late '80s and early '90s," she says. "That's how I learned to sing, singing along to the radio, 'cause that's what my dad would do."

Meath studied theater at Bennington College, where she launched Mountain Man in her junior year, only to see it take off on the Internet. And things have moved even faster for Sylvan Esso, who quickly sold out their Sept. 10 show at the Sinclair.

"I am very surprised by how it's moving," Meath says. "At the same time, we made a record that we wanted to be really accessible." ◆

JUST CAUSE

I DRANK BEER FOR CHARITY, AND YOU SHOULD TOO.

I WASN'T SURPRISED WHEN I WAS NOMINATED—if that's the right word—for the Ice Bucket Challenge, the ALS fundraiser that's been sweeping the nation. If social media has taught us anything, it's that people love to get in on a meme, and this one quickly mutated into something like the Harlem Shake with a philanthropic bent.

If you've somehow managed to avoid the Ice Bucket Challenge, let me explain the ground rules: You dump a bucket of ice water on your head or pledge money to the Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis Association—many people do both—and then call on others to do the same. If you ask why you should dump ice water on your head, you are a horrible person who hates charities and it makes me physically ill to even look at you. For shame, for shame, you warm, dry person.

The cause in question, ALS, is also known as Lou Gehrig's disease, because he was the first famous person to have it. Interestingly enough, in Bill Bryson's One Summer: America, 1927, Bryson spends quite a while explaining what a dud Gehrig was when it came to the ladies. Before leaving on a road trip, Gehrig and his mom "would kiss and hug for 10 minutes, to the acute discomfort of teammates nearby." Even at age 23, as a star for the Yankees, Gehrig had never had a girlfriend and lived at home.

This might be attributable to the fact that, according to Bryson, Gehrig "suffered from an almost total lack of personality." So even if he never developed ALS, we still might have something called Lou Gehrig's disease, but the main symptom would be horrible game. "Oh, man, did you see Smitty get shot down by that girl at the bar?" "Hey, take it easy. He has Lou Gehrig's disease."

So, back to the ice buckets. The ALS Association says that, so far, the legions of ice bathers—inspired in part by former BC baseball player Pete Frates, who is living with ALS—have generated more than $100 million in donations. And that's fantastic—not just for the money, but because, as an awareness raiser, this is the best thing since Curt Schilling's bloody sock. My question, though, is why do these charitable activities always need to include some kind of unpleasant physical component? Why must we suffer in our philanthropy? It seems like every kind of pledge or challenge involves a torturous bike ride, a brutal run or some other feat of endurance. Support me in my pledge to walk on my hands from Maine to Texas, and you, too, can help eradicate kennel cough.

So I decided to modify the challenge. When my buddy Dave nominated me, he told me I had 24 hours to give $10, douse myself or both. So I had some time to think about this. And I concluded that I was ready to take the Ice Bucket Challenge in a new direction.

Instead of dumping cold water on my head, I filled a bucket with ice packs. Then I placed a single bottle of Samuel Adams Summer Ale in there. I let it get cold, because obviously coldness is an essential part of the ritual. Then I took the beer out of the bucket, opened it with my favorite mermaid-shaped opener and drank it. The beer was perfectly chilled and refreshing, and the mere taste of it inspired me to go inside and donate $50 to the ALS Association. What a great fundraiser!

Per the format of the Ice Bucket Challenge, I nominated a couple of people to join me in my fight against ALS and thirst. One was my buddy Doyle, who told me that he'd already donated but would drink a beer anyway. The other was North Korean tyrant Kim Jong-un, because I feel it's time for him to pull his weight on this. And also because I wasn't entirely confident in my pronunciation of "Putin." Is it "Pee-yoo-tin" or "Poo-tin"? OK, I just looked it up, and it's actually pronounced "Poo-teen," which is hilarious. That means that in Quebec, his name is President Gravy Fries. And also that if I ever go to Russia I will probably be thrown in the gulag next to Pussy Riot.

As for the Ice Bucket Challenge, I suppose it's an attention getter, but I maintain that these things should be fun. Where's the Get a Massage for Cancer challenge? Because I would do that. I would nobly go get a massage, donate money to fight cancer and nominate others to do the same. How about Peace and Quiet for Pets? I pledge to enjoy a little peace and quiet—as if that's POSSIBLE AROUND HERE—and in return I'll give some dough to the MSPCA. Everybody wins.

See, it's just about linking an activity and a cause. A fundraiser doesn't have to include getting punched in the groin. Although I bet that one would be a big hit. ◆

As an awareness raiser, this is the best thing since Curt Schilling's bloody sock.

WEDDING DAZE

SOUND ADVICE ON THE BIG DAY, CATTY CO-WORKERS AND LONG-DISTANCE LOVE

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is the Boston Globe No. 1 best-seller No One Ever Told Us That, a collection of letters with life lessons for his grandchildren. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

I'm engaged and beginning the wedding planning process. I've always wanted a smaller, intimate wedding, but both my fiance's parents and mine are pushing for something a lot bigger. I probably won't be the one paying for this either way—do I have to sacrifice my dream day? You're going to have lots of dream days, and for many, the wedding day is far from dreamy. If they're being honest, many brides and grooms would admit their wedding days (or nights) are mostly blurs, outtakes from a Fellini movie. I think you should just take a deep breath and give in to the family members on both sides. I know this is tough, but you don't want your family and your new in-laws to have their noses out of joint. And think about it: They're paying for it, but the advantage will now pass to you. You can always say to them, "You see, look at the money we could've saved you!" And you can have many smaller, intimate celebrations on your own in the years to come. You may even look back on your wedding pictures and be glad you played dress-up.

I have worked in the tech industry for 20 years and have a great breadth of experience. What I lack is a fancy degree from MIT/Stanford/Harvard etc. Time and again when attempting a startup and doing the venture capital circuit, I experience the same thing: Companies that have founders with zero real-world experience will get funding based on nothing more than the colleges they attended. As with most startups, they still fail. Without "name-brand recognition," it can be a challenge to set meetings, let alone get seed/angel money at a critical time in a startup's life cycle. Any advice for folks in my situation, or are our dreams destined to die on the vine? "Beware of perceived genius" is one of my guiding principles in life. And a fancy degree is not necessarily a ticket to anywhere. Bill Gates and Mark Zuckerberg dropped out of Harvard. But the Unabomber graduated. Go figure. I would work on your resume, highlighting why you have your own "name-brand recognition." Point out your own specialties and your own talents—and hobbies, too—that set you apart from others. Where you went to school is irrelevant, except perhaps for the networking factor. Concentrate on getting across the specialties that make you different.

I recently started a new job, and the managers gossip with one another on the regular. As a subordinate, I feel uncomfortable addressing the unprofessionalism. Should I speak up or stick it out? How do I handle it when the gossip is directed toward me? Hmm...tricky. Stopping gossip is like stopping the tide from going in and out. Almost everyone loves it and always has, because it makes the perpetrators feel good about their own pitiful lives. That being said, I assume you'd like to keep your job. It's best, for your own interests, not to tell management what you feel is inappropriate. All bets are off, however, if the gossip is pointed at you. In that case, and if you have proof that this is happening, I would address it with the gossipers and speak your mind. However, you'd better make sure that you've freshened up your resume in case you have to move on.

I'm going abroad to Europe for a semester with a group of new friends. I love my girlfriend of two years, but I want to be fully immersed in the experience without any ties to home. I don't want to lose what we have, but who knows where we'll be when we get back? Do I call it off for now? Long-distance romances generally do not work—too much time and space and imagination get in the way. And jealousy, too. If you feel like breaking it off before you travel, then either you're incredibly mature or you're probably not fully committed to your current girlfriend. If something was meant to be, you'll find out when you return. But I believe that there are infinite kinds of love out there, and it sounds as if you want to experience a few more of them yourself.

I've wanted a facelift for a long time and finally have the money set aside for the procedure, but my husband is totally against it. Do I go through with it anyway? Just do it, if this has been on your mind and you have the funds. It's fun to feel good about others' opinions of us, but it's much more important to feel good about ourselves. Your husband will most likely get over his discomfort and end up wishing he could do something about his own sagging lids.

Why invest in a 401(k)? If my employer matched my contributions, I'd do it in a heartbeat, of course. But since it doesn't, and I've seen people lose a lot due to the whims of the markets, I'm wondering whether investing in real estate is a surer long-term bet. If you're working and you ever hope to retire, contributing to a 401(k), in my view, is a must, regardless of matching. On the subject of losing money in bad markets, if you focus on funds specializing in long-term growth and/or value, or plain-vanilla index funds, and you make sure that you keep your contributions up annually, you will minimize your risk in these down markets as well. If you stay disciplined in this regard, and keep your selections simple, not fancy, in the long term you will be rewarded. Everyone who comes to visit me for the first time wants financial freedom. The best route to reach this goal is steady investing on a long-term basis. As for real estate, this is more complicated, and subject to just as many ups and downs as stocks. But if American society survives and thrives, then eventually, in the stock markets, so will you. ◆

Soroff On / Malcolm-Jamal Warner

ONE OF TELEVISION'S BELOVED SONS HITS THE STAGE IN BOSTON.

FORMER COSBY KID MALCOLM-JAMAL WARNER IS appearing in the Huntington Theatre Company's production of Guess Who's Coming to Dinner from Sept. 5 to Oct. 5. He grew up playing Theo Huxtable on The Cosby Show from 1984 to 1992, and other television credits include Malcolm & Eddie, Community, Dexter, Reed Between the Lines and Sons of Anarchy. He's appeared in the feature films Drop Zone and Fool's Gold, while his extensive stage work includes Cryin' Shame (for which he won an NAACP Theater Award), A Midsummer Night's Dream at the La Jolla Playhouse and his one-man show Love and Other Social Issues. An accomplished poet, he has performed at the National Black Theater Festival since 2003 and hosts its Poetry Jam. He plays bass guitar in his jazz-funk band Miles Long, and he's currently taking classes at Berklee. He lives in Los Angeles.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So there is life after Cosby?
MALCOLM-JAMAL WARNER: Oh, brother, yeah! But I was focused on that when we were doing the show. I literally grew up with an almost maniacal obsession with having a life after Cosby. The first season, right out of the gate, the numbers were phenomenal, but even then, I was focused on what I would do when it was over. I was 14. My mom sat me down and said, "It's great that the show is doing well, but this could all be over next year." So all eight years, I lived like it was the last episode. I'd seen one of those Where Are They Now? things on VH1, and it scared the bejesus out of me. I did not want that to be my existence.

Wasn't it strange to go through adolescence in front of the whole world? I expected to. When I was a kid, I used to hang out with Kim Fields. She was like a big sister to me, because her mother ran an acting school. The Facts of Life was on, but this was before The Cosby Show. People would ask Kim for her autograph or whatever, and she was just so incredibly nice, and I remember thinking, "When I get my TV show, I'm going to be as nice as Kim." So I fully expected to have a TV show as a kid. [Laughs]

How did you stay connected to reality? I grew up on the No. 1 television show in the world, but I was living in New York. We first shot in Brooklyn, and then Queens. And I think doing the show in New York had a significantly positive impact on us kids. In Brooklyn, we didn't have a commissary. So for lunch, we had to go out into this Jewish neighborhood and find something to eat. When we moved to Queens, the commissary wasn't that great, so we'd go out in this Italian neighborhood. Just growing up in New York, we were faced with reality. So that had a great influence on our perspective. Yeah, we were on this television show, but we saw real life all around us.

Were Bill Cosby and Phylicia Rashad like parents to you? [Laughs] No, man! Mr. Cosby has five f---ing kids of his own. He was a colleague, and a friend and a mentor. I spent half my life under his wing. But he wasn't really a father figure. I think the reason all of us from that show turned out OK was that we all had parents who were very hands on and involved.

"I'd seen one of those Where Are They Now? things on VH1, and it scared the bejesus out of me. I did not want that..."

Best piece of advice Cosby ever gave you? Most of what I learned from him was by example. His work ethic was incredible. We would get the show done, and he'd spend his days off in Vegas, Tahoe or wherever, doing his stand-up. I learned that when you're hot, that's when you bust ass. I do remember one time, though, I was 15 and talking to him about some girl I was jonesing for. He said, "Malcolm, in your lifetime, you're going to meet a million beautiful women. And you can't f---'em all." [Laughs]

So what was the most embarrassing '80s look you sported? Probably the red high-top fade. [Laughs]

Biggest audition disaster? Probably The Cosby Show. I went into it and delivered my lines, and Mr. Cosby said, "Would you really talk to your father like that?" I was like, "No," and I thought, "I totally f---ed that up."

Favorite poet? It's probably a tie between Saul Williams and Taalam Acey. He's the only poet who could get away with doing a piece dissing Saul Williams while Saul Williams was in the audience.

Which are you better at: poetry or music? Poetry, hands down. I've been doing it longer. Music is a lifetime commitment, and I came to it kind of late, at 26. It takes so much energy and dedication and time and practice just to be an OK musician. My dad went to college with Gil Scott-Heron, and I came out of the womb listening to his music. That level of musicianship is something I could never hope to achieve.

Fantasy love scene partner? Oh, that's good. Really good. I'm gonna go with Anna Paquin.

Do you feel the issues raised in Guess Who's Coming to Dinner are as relevant now as they were in 1967? Yes, I do. Despite what some people say, I don't think we live in a "post-racial" world. There's still, on both sides, a sentiment of drawing a line. I think most white people are cool with black people. They're fine with a black person living next door. They're fine with a black person coming to dinner or playing golf. But they'd have a problem if their daughter married a black guy. And I think the same is true with black people. It's a sort of universal examination of "otherness."

You've played this role before. Does that make it easier? It's easier in the sense that I know the material. I've inhabited the character and understand him. But it's a different approach. Because it's different actors, and I'm in a different place than I was the last time I did it, my approach has to be different. That's the exciting part.

Do you prefer TV or the stage? Theater is my favorite platform. Television is my favorite paycheck. In the theater, you get to rehearse for several weeks with the actors you're actually going to be on stage with. There's stuff that you get on the stage that's not on the page.

OK, finish this poem: Roses are red, violets are blue, Malcolm-Jamal Warner's in Boston... And if you're not, you should be too. ◆

METRO BOSTON'S STYLE-SAVVY GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND PATRIOTIC POP-UPS

AGENDA for 9/3–9/16

Field of Seams

'Murrican made.

YOUR NEIGHBOR'S LABOR DAY barbecue isn't the only opportunity to celebrate good, old-fashioned American hard work this month. While we love burgers and beer just as much as the next guy, we're more excited about American Field, a big pop-up market and trade show featuring stylish goods crafted right here in the U.S. of A. The merch includes clothing, furnishings and accessories made by artisans from across the country, but New England is well represented, with General Knot & Co.'s Vermont-made bow ties, leather bags from Fall River's Frank Clegg and Navy-approved peacoats from Boston's own Sterlingwear. And while the stuff for sale is excellent, so is American Field's mission: raising awareness of the benefits of buying domestic products that help create quality jobs from coast to coast. We'll raise a beer to that. Check out the wares along with speakers, demos, live music and food vendors on Sept. 13-14 at the Innovation and Design Building. / Alexandra Cavallo

AMERICAN FIELD runs Sept. 13 14 at the Innovation and Design Building, 21-25 Drydock Ave., Boston. Free americanfield.us.

POINT OF PRIDE Long before War Horse got galloping, The Lion King set the bar for beasts on stage. In the Tony Award-winning adaptation of the Disney film, vibrant costumes and life-sized puppets transform a cast of more than 40 human actors into all manner of African wildlife, from fierce lions and towering giraffes to lithe gazelles and menacing hyenas. Add in dramatic choreography and much-loved music from Elton John and Tim Rice, and it's no wonder this breathtaking spin on Simba's story has been seen by more than 70 million audience members around the world. Join the pride when Broadway in Boston brings The Lion King to the Boston Opera House from Sept. 9 through Oct. 12. / Alexandra Cavallo

SEEING DOUBLE We've seen posthumous performances by Tupac and the King of Pop, years after their deaths, in the form of eerily lifelike holograms. It's a concept that 10 years ago would have seemed unreal, so it may not be long before the events in The Congress start playing out in real life. In the film directed by Ari Folman, Robin Wright plays a star who leaves Hollywood to care for her ailing son. She signs over the rights to her digital identity, allowing studio execs to create a computer-generated version to perform in her place for the next 20 years, but creating unforeseen problems down the line. Glimpse the future when it premieres on Sept. 5 at the Brattle Theatre. / Meghan Kavanaugh

Begin Again ★★★ This film's original title, Can a Song Save Your Life?, was probably a little too on-the-nose—even for a narrative as sincere, heartfelt and corny as Once writer/director John Carney's latest music-driven confection. So Begin Again he did with a new name for this New York-set charmer, which got lost in the shuffle when it premiered at last September's Toronto Film Festival. It took a while to arrive in multiplexes, but saving this small-scale toe-tapper for summer is a canny bit of counterprogramming. After all, while it shares some of the same shaggy-dog pleasures as Carney's 2006 crowd-pleaser, nothing blows up, no one gets shot and the only hero to show up on screen is Dan Mulligan, a fallen record-label co-founder. Sure, he's played by Mark Ruffalo—the Incredible Hulk himself—but Dan's the only one in need of saving. That is, until he drunkenly stumbles into an East Village club and hears lovelorn songwriter Greta (Keira Knightley, who can sing!) and recognizes the potential for mutual salvation—and Carney scores a hit once again. (At West Newton.)

Boyhood ★★★1/2 With his landmark trilogy—1995's Before Sunrise, 2004's Before Sunset and last year's Before Midnight—writer/director Richard Linklater has spent 18 years tracking the lives of two lovers (Julie Delpy and Ethan Hawke), checking in with them at nine-year intervals. With his latest extended-storytelling experiment, an epic chronicle of childhood's mundane moments filmed over 12 years, Linklater finds the poetry in growing up. When we meet Mason Evans Jr. (played by newcomer Ellar Coltrane from ages 6 to 18), he's a cute little moppet going about everyday kid stuff. But Linklater's not interested in an idyllic Norman Rockwell portrait. Mason's part of a fractured family, held together by his mom (Patricia Arquette, never better). Humorous signifiers act as time capsules, buried throughout the film to clue us into the year of the action. Some of these signposts are quite literal: By the end of W's second term, Mason Sr. (Hawke) has his son planting Obama signs on neighborhood lawns—while uprooting McCain posters. It's just one of life's little moments that makes this 2 hour and 46 minute film move so effortlessly fast. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Calvary ★★★★ "I first tasted semen when I was 7 years old." Thus is the first of many memorable lines in writer/director John Michael McDonagh's moving, darkly comic sophomore film—one spoken in a brogue by an unseen man sitting opposite Father James Lavelle (the great Brendan Gleeson) inside the confessional of a sleepy Irish fishing village. "It's certainly a startling opening line," responds the priest, before this lost sheep continues his tale of being raped by a member of the clergy—and shares his intention to exact murderous revenge in a week's time upon the innocent Lavelle, a man incapable of horrors that became far too commonplace. And so, a dead man walks, still tending to his flock, his trials mounting by the day. It's a classic American Western scenario, with the massive rocky outgrowths and damp green fields of Easkey, Ireland, standing in for the dust of Monument Valley. One might willfully misread the movie's title, but alas, there's no cavalry on the way; Lavelle stands alone. Like Gary Cooper's Marshal Kane in High Noon, he marches stoically toward his would-be killer, armed with nothing but his faith. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

Chef ★★★ This isn't a movie about Jon Favreau. Sure, he wrote, directed and starred in this comedy about a once-hot gourmet chef, Carl Casper, who's in a creative rut. After being called out by his critics, Casper begins serving up delectable Cuban sandwiches from a food truck, winning back favor from customers and critics alike by returning to his roots. Favreau's a filmmaker who impressed with the hit indies Swingers and Made, and then a couple of massive Iron Man movies, before making the joyless critical and commercial failure Cowboys & Aliens. But Chef is a small picture, a tasty concoction in which his simmering acting chops are brought to a boil by 10-year-old Emjay Anthony, who delightfully underplays Casper's son, Percy, as the two bond over the heat of the truck's grill on a cross-country trip. Is Favreau as thin-skinned as Casper, who gets into a very public social media spat with one of his earliest supporters? Who cares, when such big talents as Dustin Hoffman, John Leguizamo, Sofia Vergara, Oliver Platt, Scarlett Johansson and Robert Downey Jr. are along for the ride? (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Get on Up ★★★ Only in Hollywood can a white man become a primary chronicler of the African American experience. Nevertheless, director Tate Taylor displays the same deft hand in orchestrating a fine ensemble cast (including Nelsan Ellis, Viola Davis, Octavia Spencer, Craig Robinson and Dan Aykroyd) as he did in the surprise Oscar nominee The Help. His music-driven follow-up offers a nonlinear look at the life of "the Godfather of Soul," James Brown, as played by Chadwick Boseman. The screenplay does a decent job of distilling six decades of his career, bouncing from 1988 to 1968 to 1938 and back. The music is wonderful, and the film has an infectious energy that's missing in Jersey Boys, Clint Eastwood's oddly sterile musical biopic that lacks the one element that elevates Taylor's pic beyond the boilerplate: a Movie Star performance. After his terrific turn as Jackie Robinson in 42 and this iconic rendering of Brown (a role that easily could have lapsed into Eddie Murphy-like caricature), Boseman has portrayed two of the most influential black figures of the 20th century. He's a talent for the 21st. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

THE GIVER ★1/2 All of the recent film adaptations of dystopian young-adult novels influenced by Cambridge-based author Lois Lowry's 1994 Newbery Medal-winning book about a colorless Community of perfectly content people who fear nothing—not war, not pain and especially not pleasure—only serve to make producer/star Jeff Bridges' long-gestating passion project feel like an also-ran. Lowry's tome focuses on the interactions between the Giver and Jonas, a 12-year-old who has been carefully selected as his Community's rare "Receiver of Memory." But movie audiences for the Twilight and Hunger Games adaptations skew a little older, which explains the decision to advance the age of Jonas (25-year-old Australian hunk Brenton Thwaites) to 16. Also older are his friends Asher (Cameron Monaghan) and Fiona (Odeya Rush), whose expanded roles in Aussie director Phillip Noyce's film facilitate both a love interest and action scenes: After Jonas socks him in the face, Asher hunts his pal with an airborne drone. Who needs to be faithful to the novel? Bridges, for one. His solemn role as the Giver is one of the few things worth praising in the picture, which otherwise has little to give. (In the suburbs.)

GUARDIANS OF THE GALAXY ★★ Risking the rage of fanboys everywhere, I find myself oddly detached from James Gunn's adaptation of this atypical Marvel Comics property. In the past, we've had Robert Downey Jr. to make his iron suit shine, and, by golly, that Chris Evans sure is keen as America's oldest Boy Scout—but they exist here, on planet Earth. Charming though Chris Pratt is in his first starring role, he's stuck in a space opera that will sell a lot of toys (and comic books) but test those with low tolerance for characters named Drax, Gamora, Groot or... Yondu Udonta? Pratt plays Peter Quill, or "Star-Lord," a case of arrested development—but then, he was abducted by aliens before hitting puberty. Twenty-six years later, he leads a band of intergalactic misfits as massive chunks of exposition hurtle past us. (Let's see, after they visit the planets Morag, Xander and Nova Prime, they'll travel to Nowhere, aka "the severed head of an ancient celestial being.") Despite genuinely funny performances from Pratt and Bradley Cooper (voicing a wisecracking, gun-toting raccoon), the film wears thin before succumbing to third-act Marvel bloat. Watch it make a fortune. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

HOW TO TRAIN YOUR DRAGON 2 ★★★1/2 When How to Train Your Dragon hit theaters, DreamWorks Animation finally offered Disney/Pixar some legitimate competition—not only visually, but also with its level of storytelling and character sophistication. Sure, co-directors Dean DeBlois and Chris Sanders had fashioned a familiar story with their tale of Hiccup (voiced by Jay Baruchel), the scrawny Viking who bonds with the creature that's supposed to be his sworn enemy. Toothless, his cat-like dragon steed, shared DNA with the alien in DeBlois and Sanders' earlier success, Lilo & Stitch, which also featured a youth secretly fostering a lethal beast. And while it may have lacked the depth of Pixar's best, it was still a real beauty. Flying solo this time, DeBlois picks up five years after Hiccup and Toothless united man and monster in the Vikings' island community. The pair spend their days soaring through the skies and charting new territories, until they encounter the mysterious Dragon Rider—and a devastating new threat. While this gorgeously rendered sequel isn't as humorous as its predecessor, it's darker, richer and more mature—much like its older and wiser protagonist. (In the suburbs.)

The Hundred-Foot Journey ★★1/2 Bringing novelist Richard C. Morais' best-seller to the big screen, director Lasse Hallström employs the same unsubtle touch that made 2000's Chocolat, his sultry romantic drama set in a small French village, such a hit. No doubt, that's exactly what producers Steven Spielberg and Oprah Winfrey wanted for the tale of Hassan Kadam (Manish Dayal), a handsome culinary magician who flees London ("British vegetables have no soul," you see) with his siblings and their Papa (Om Puri) after they've already been displaced from their native India. The family settles in—yes—a small French village after a vehicular mishap nearly kills them. "Maybe brakes break for a reason," announces the elder Kadam, rationalizing his intention to open an Indian restaurant 100 feet from the elegant Michelin-starred restaurant lorded over by Madame Mallory (Helen Mirren, who won't win another Oscar for her French accent). Hassan's talents eventually broker a truce to the war between the eateries, but a third-act detour to Paris nearly kills the film—until Dayal's star turn charms the picture back to life during the conclusion's return to the south of France. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Into the Storm ★ Second only to February, August is when movie studios send lame films out to movie theater pasture to be shot—or at least when they get suckers to part with their hard-earned cash. Take Step Up All In, which is apparently so bad that it didn't screen for press. Then there's this third-rate knockoff of second-rate 1996 blockbuster Twister, a storm-chasing thriller that at least featured a first-rate character actor, the late, great Philip Seymour Hoffman, who helped ground sights like tornado-swept cows. To be fair, director Steven Quale's film does star Matt Walsh, who has 105 acting credits, so it's not like he hasn't paid his dues; you'll recognize his face, if not his name. And yet, he's stuck in the umpteenth movie in recent memory that relies on the tired "found footage" gimmick that always leaves me wondering, "Who found this?" when I should really be asking, "Why am I watching this?" Oh, right—so you don't have to. Need more warning? This schlock is penned by John Swetnam, the same talent who wrote...Step Up All In. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Assembly Row and in the suburbs.)

Land Ho! ★★★1/2 Martha Stephens wrote and directed the features Passenger Pigeons and Pilgrim Song, which you likely haven't heard of. Nevertheless, without those films under her belt, she wouldn't have discovered Southern spitfire Earl Lynn Nelson, a newcomer to the acting game who starred in both. Through some miracle (likely the hand of executive producer David Gordon Green), Stephens has been partnered with Aaron Katz, the talented writer/director behind little-seen indies Quiet City, Cold Weather and Dance Party, USA. It's a great mix. The two share writing and directing credits on this crowd-pleaser about a pair of 60-something brother-in-laws—one widowed, one divorced—who rekindle their bond during a picturesque trip to Iceland. "Ex-brother-in-laws," corrects Colin (Australian Paul Eenhoorn, star of This Is Martin Bonner), after Mitch (Nelson) apologizes for "tricking" him into the trip. "That's a pretty lousy thing to do," Colin deadpans. "Driving through the country, staying at nice hotels, eating good food." Our odd couple also spend an evening clubbing with two young "tight-assed women," which is a compliment coming from Mitch, who's fond of calling people "turd." Delightful. (At Kendall Square.)

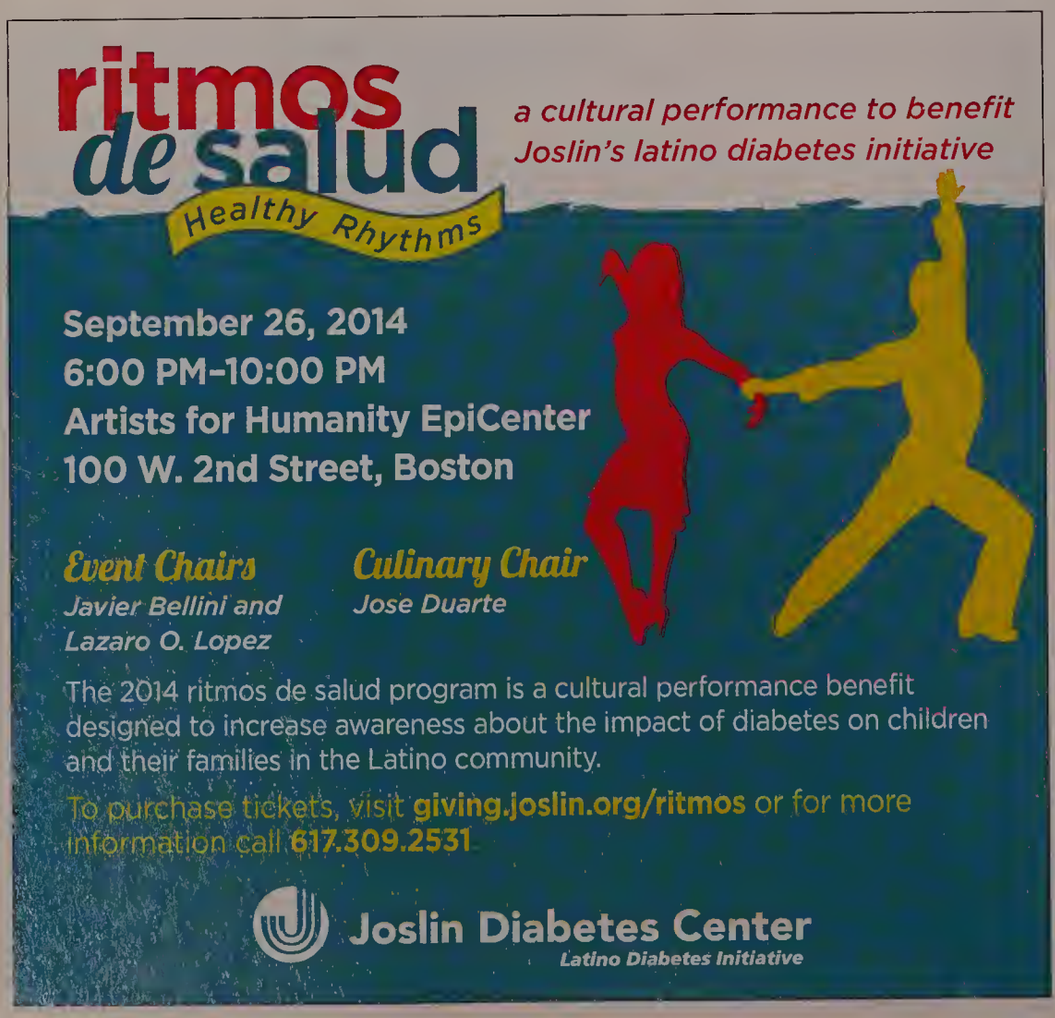
Maleficent ★★ After questionably rebooting Alice in Wonderland as a vehicle for Johnny Depp's Mad Hatter, Disney's at it again, needlessly revisiting Sleeping Beauty in live action from the perspective of Maleficent, who's given high-cheekboned life by Angelina Jolie. Continuing the violent tradition of Disney's live-action misfire The Lone Ranger, screenwriter Linda Woolverton spins a wheel around rape culture, as future king Stefan (Sharlto Copley) revisits the moors where he shared a childhood romance with Maleficent, then a young winged fairy. Returning to the older, lovesick girl, he essentially roofies her. Waking alone, she's horrified to discover that Stefan has clipped her wings. His daughter, Princess Aurora (Elle Fanning), is reduced to a supporting role, but a heavy still has to die, as all irredeemable Disney villains must. Ah, but it's not Maleficent. In this unsettling revision, she's a victim, and her trauma is palpable. Fun for the whole family! (In the suburbs.)



The November Man ★1/2 "You feel the need for a relationship?" ex-CIA agent Peter Devereaux (Pierce Brosnan) asks his former protege, David Mason (Luke Bracey), before telling him to "get a dog" in this international espionage picture from Roger Donaldson (Brosnan's Dante's Peak director). Likewise, if you feel the need to see Brosnan go through the run-and-gun motions of the spy game, watch him in one of his James Bond films. Apparently, Brosnan misses his iconic role enough to have executive produced this cut-rate thriller that casts former Bond girl Olga Kurylenko (Quantum of Solace) as Alice Fournier, the woman the licensed killer has made it his mission to save, as he protects her from the trigger-happy patriot Mason, who's unknowingly taking orders from a corrupt senior official within the agency who's protecting Arkady Federov (Lazar Ristovski), Russia's president-elect. Based on Bill Granger's novel There are No Spies, part of the "November Man" book series, this second-rate spook is a long way from an Ian Fleming character, and this picture leaves you neither shaken nor stirred. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sin City: A Dame to Kill For ★1/2 The stylish Sin City was a movie I would have loved had I been 15. Alas, as an adult, the juvenile sensibilities that Robert Rodriguez brought to the 2005 screen adaptation of the graphic novel by Frank Miller (who co-directed) added up to black-and-white overkill. Nine years on, what nevertheless felt fresh now feels stale in cinemas overstuffed with BANG! And POW! The original's Clive Owen was smart to pass on this sequel (his character, Dwight, was recast with Josh Brolin, a strong actor who's altogether wrong for this role), which also brings back

Bruce Willis, whose character, Hartigan, died in the first outing; it's as if he's wandered in from The Sixth Sense. Mickey Rourke's Marv lacks the pathos that made his character the best thing in the original, while Miller's mix of old and new stories simply feels like leftovers in his and Rodriguez's late return to a barren well. Still, my 15-year-old self would have loved Eva Green, who almost makes this worth seeing. Almost. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Assembly Row, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Trip to Italy ★★★ A few years back, prolific filmmaker Michael Winterbottom unleashed a culinary, comic treat with The Trip, a largely improvised travelogue featuring comedians Steve Coogan and Rob Brydon (as a pair of friends named, conveniently, Steve Coogan and Rob Brydon) touring around northern England, sampling the region's restaurants on a magazine assignment. It wasn't really about much more than that, but listening to this duo riff off each other as semi-fictionalized versions of themselves sure was funny. They haven't lost any of their comic edge as they return for seconds, traveling from Piedmont, to the Amalfi Coast, to Capri in a convertible Mini Cooper, retracing the steps of the Romantic poets. It's doubtful that Byron and Shelley engaged in dueling impersonations of 19th-century actors, but hearing the Alan Partridge star (Coogan) and the talented Welsh mimic (Brydon) return to the vocal stylings of Michael Caine, as well as volley back-and-forth with the voices of various James Bonds, Batman, his nemesis Bane, and the different decibels of Al Pacino is side-splitting. (At Kendall Square.)

What If ★★1/2 With his latest film, director Michael Dowse doesn't quite score a winning goal as he did with his last picture, the criminally under-seen hockey comedy Goon. But then, he doesn't have another crackling, profane script to shoot from. In fact, the swears have been cut entirely from this once-R-rated romantic comedy/drama, which was originally known as The F Word. As released, this PG-13 exploration of "the friend zone" awkwardly overdubs that most flexible of profanities with..."fishhook"? At least Dowse has a couple of MVPs in his leads. Harry Potter's Daniel Radcliffe retains his British accent as med-school dropout Wallace, whom we first see as he deletes the breakup voicemail he's been listening to on his iPhone for 379 days. Moments later, he meets animator Chantry (Zoe Kazan) as the two arrange magnetic poetry at a house party hosted by Allan (Adam Driver), Chantry's cousin and Wallace's best friend. Alas, standing between these obvious soul mates is UN lawyer Ben (Rafe Spall), Chantry's longtime boyfriend. Will these two ever recognize what the audience does five minutes in? What the fishhook do you think? (At Boston Common.)

MUSIC

HERE COMES THE SUN

The first time Nikki Taylor, Matt Lewkowicz and Eric Zeiler played for a live audience was at SXSW in 2013, and they performed under a pseudonym, Lux Petite, to ease the pressure. These days, however, Little Daylight are fully out of the shadows. The Brooklyn synth-pop outfit, who first gained notice for their bouncy remixes of Passion Pit and Edward Sharpe & the Magnetic Zeros tracks, have opened for the likes of mega-hit-makers Bastille and Charli XCX. Now touring in support of Hello Memory, a full-length debut album chock full of sunny beats and irrepressible electro hooks, Little Daylight will be performing very much as themselves on Sept. 15 when they hit Great Scott. / Sarah Hagman

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

APPLIED SCIENCE After studying and working as a mechanical engineer, Alexander Calder moved on to art, but his training wasn't for naught: His background as a draftsman for the New York Edison Company proved useful when dreaming up kinetie sculptures. A visit to abstract painter Piet Mondrian's studio prompted him to create free-floating works, later termed mobiles, whose movement inspired composers such as Earle Brown and made Albert Einstein lament that he hadn't thought of them himself. This fall, 40 of his mobiles and stabiles—freestanding stationary sculptures—are on view in Calder and Abstraction: From Avant-Garde to Iconic, hanging out from Sept. 6 through Jan. 4 at the Peabody Essex Museum. / Sarah Hagman

JOY RIDE

Boston's love for two-wheeled transportation hardly began with Hubway. Home to the country's first bicycle club and a number of early cycling magazines, the city played a big role in the bicycle boom of the late 19th century, as chronicled in Boston's Cycling Craze, 1880-1900: A Story of Race, Sport, and Society. Author Lorenz J. Finison, a founding member of black bicycling network Cycling Through History, shows how riders navigated tricky terrain (including restrictions based on race, gender, class and religion) in pursuit of their favorite sport. Ride—don't walk—to catch Finison on Sept. 4 at Brookline Booksmith. / Julianne McShane

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

MIDSUMMER MADNESS

If music be the food of love, then Commonwealth Shakespeare Company played beautifully this summer, because everyone seemed to love its production of Twelfth Night.

Opening night began with drinks and light nibbles at the Parkman House (the city-owned mansion on Beacon Hill), and the crowd included Hollywood homey Mike O'Malley, whose sister Kerry played a hilariously sexy Olivia, along with his wife, Lisa, and their daughter, Fiona, snappy, crackling Pops conductor Keith Lockhart and his crackerjack wife, Emilcy, achingly beautiful jewelry designer April Soderstrom, Scandinavian sex bomb Anja Kola and her lucky husband, Kier McDonough (aka Kiefer McDougall), quister mush William Grote, hedge-fund hottie Dennis Hong and the irresistible Rob Hagan, New England Conservatory rainmaker Janet Goff, stage legend Will Lyman, the ubiquitous Janet Wu, Babson grand poobah Kerry Healey, fundraising guru Jane Lewis, arts booster Joan Moynagh, dangerously fashionable duo Suhail Kwatra and Amber D'Amelio, Mullen Mad Man John Wolfarth and his handsome husband, Kevin Powers, ICA factotum Kate Shamon and her sexy cue ball, Andy Rushford, UK Consul General Susie Kitchens and her son, Tyson, attorney at-large Tad Heuer, beauty queen Ashley Karger and one unfortunate person who got chicken satay on his shoes (namely me).

After sipping and kibitzing, everyone crossed Beacon Street onto the Common to take their seats for the production, which was wet-your-pants funny. (Fortunately there were porta-potties.) A cast party followed at Carrie Nation, where the bartenders got a good workout and the guests could mingle with the likes of former Salon Mario Russo imp turned superstar Conner Christiansen, who stole the show as Sir Andrew Aguecheek.

In keeping with the family-friendly nature of the event, the evening's funniest remarks were family-related: Speaking to a pregnant friend, one guest said, "Do you know the sex? Because boys are more of a pain in the ass, but girls are more expensive." Meanwhile, a mother of two little ones said, "It's not a vacation if you have your kids with you; it's just a change of venue."

MIDDLE-AGED LADIES SAY THE DARNDEST THINGS

On Martha's Vineyard, there's rarely a night when some member of the Taylor clan isn't singing somewhere, but it was an especially beautiful setting when Partners for Youth with Disabilities hosted The Mentors Muster—a fundraiser featuring a performance by Sally Taylor and Something Underground at the Gannon and Benjamin shipyard on Vineyard Haven Harbor.

While the audience sipped wine and listened to JT and Carly Simon's fantastically talented progeny perform with her Colorado compadres Josh and Scth Larson, children swung out into the water on a swing rigged to the boom of a sailboat, making for a backdrop straight out of a Ralph Lauren ad.

Present and accounted for: ethereal scenester Kristina Lyons and her king of the jungle, Patrick, gorgeous blond earth mother Julie Sennott and her unruly brood, prominent artist Alison Shaw, debonair do-gooder Jeremy Flug, Taylor's husband, reformed male model Dean Bragonier, soon-to-be Bostonians Betsy and Todd Bowden, and a slew of deeply tanned, good-looking people.

The evening's most amusing exchange: One attendee said, "I had brain surgery last summer," to which another responded, "It looks like it worked."

However, the award for most family-unfriendly remark goes to the woman who ran into a college classmate she hadn't seen in 30 years and said, almost immediately, "You took me to my first gay bar, and we did poppers!" ◆

CHANGE OF ART

CROSS-POLLINATION ISN'T JUST good for the begonias—it can invigorate the arts as well. Take our cover subject, triple-threat talent Nat Faxon, who tells Jonathan Soroff how sketch comedy helped hone his Oscar-winning screenwriting skills (in addition to fostering a love for fake mustaches). Or consider the subject of our Imperatives opener, Consenses, a project that has sparked collaborations between artists of disparate disciplines, with musicians drawing on the work of photographers and perfumers culling from painters. In a similar spirit, our lead feature offers unexpected pairings of some of the most intriguing happenings in a season packed with premiere productions, landmark exhibits and first-time festivals. And in a second feature, Scott Kearnan takes a closer look at four artists with exciting fall projects of their own, offering a peek into the creative process of a composer, a choreographer, a visual artist and an author, who share how they work and where they find inspiration, from subway rides to a retro board game. Whether you're a creator yourself or just looking to fill your fall calendar, I hope this issue helps you find some inspiration too.

CREATIVE CALLING

SALLY TAYLOR'S ARTISTIC GAME OF TELEPHONE »

LINKED IN: Find full deets on the chains' stops in Somerville and Cambridge at consenses.org.

Art That Gets a Reaction

Imagine: You're standing in a gallery. In your hand is a perfumed strip of paper; over your ears, a pair of headphones. As you breathe in the scent and the music swells, you watch a dance performance unfold on video, while peeking at a painting and a sculpture on the periphery. Sound heady? It is, especially when you know that each creation is a link in the same artistic chain reaction. The catalyst for it all: local musician Sally Taylor, the progeny of James Taylor and Carly Simon and the creator of Consenses, a multidisciplinary art project two years in the making.

Taylor was originally inspired by the Indian fable about six blind men encountering an elephant; each feels a different part of the animal—one grasping the ropy tail, another touching a leg as thick as a tree trunk—and draws conclusions based on his limited experience, the moral being that perception is never right or wrong. But the project might be best described as an artistic game of telephone. In Consenses, an artist is given a work from another genre—without being told any context about it—and asked to interpret it in a new piece. He or she then passes the resulting work (but not the original that inspired it) to a choreographer, musician or some other creator from a different field, who offers a new interpretation, and so on until (ideally) all of the senses are engaged. "It's really about art as a journey rather than a destination," says Taylor, who exhibited eight of the completed "chains" on Martha's Vineyard this summer and will showcase them at 212 Elm St. in Somerville from Sept. 26 to Oct. 7 and at Club Oberon in Cambridge from Sept. 29 to Oct. 1.

To display the chains, Taylor enlisted the aid of set designers who were privy to all the pieces and aimed to create a unified viewing experience. The result is nothing short of astonishing. Chain #7, for instance, begins with an image by acclaimed Vineyard photographer Alison Shaw, which then spawned a song by musician Isaac Taylor, who gave a recording to Canadian dancer Alexandre Lane and Dutch-born Canadian painter Hendrik "Henk" Gringhuis, whose choreography and painting inspired an anonymous perfumer's scent and finally a sculpture by North Carolina artist Thomas Sayre. In viewing a completed chain, what leaps out is not what's lost in translation, but the commonalities, the way the strong sense of geometry in Shaw's original photo persists through song, dance, scent, painting and sculpture.

So far, the project has tapped more than 140 artists from 23 countries, ranging from Taylor's astonishingly talented extended family and big names like Wes Craven to esoteric artists working in far-flung corners of the earth. The project comprises 22 chains in total, but the potential for perpetuation is obvious, and the explosion of creativity is inspirational, whether you're an artist, an aesthete or just someone who revels in the senses. / Jonathan Soroff

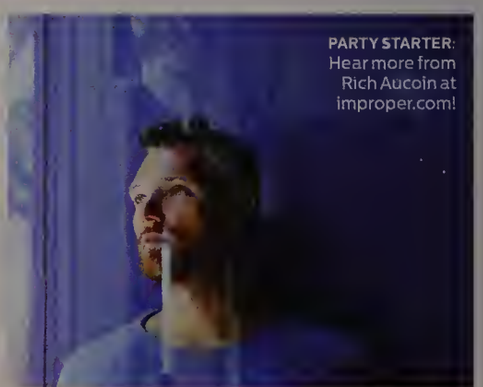
ALL TOGETHER NOW

Canadian indie rocker Rich Aucoin's shows are madcap, kinetic, participatory parties involving props like giant parachutes and confetti. We caught up with Aucoin, who's at Great Scott on Sept. 24, while he backtracked to the previous night's venue for a forgotten laptop. Call it collateral damage of a very good time. / Alexandra Cavallo

I'VE BEEN TO ONE OF YOUR SHOWS—IT WAS LIKE BEING ON DRUGS WITHOUT TAKING ANY. I think that's a good, apt description. When I try to describe it to someone in elevator-length conversation, I say it's like crowd karaoke to a bunch of songs you don't know, covered in the sweat and confetti of your friends.



DO YOU EVER HAVE A NIGHT WHERE YOU JUST DON'T FEEL ON? Oh yeah. You've just got to somehow channel the motivation to perform. The thing I tend to think of the most is that each time there's someone who's only going to see you that one time, and that's your only time in this life with them. So, you might as well perform as hard as you can, so that their one impression of your existence isn't "Well, that was shitty."

THAT'S A GOOD WAY TO LOOK AT MOST MOMENTS IN LIFE, I THINK. I look at every show like it's my last, as well. That's another personal goal in each performance, to try to add to previous shows. I like to figure out new things during the show, see how they work.

WHAT'S NEW TO THIS TOUR? The parachutes are going to be larger than the last time you saw me—they're going be able to cover like a thousand people now!

WHERE DID YOU GET THE IDEA FOR THE PARACHUTE? I LOVE IT BECAUSE IT REMINDS ME OF GYM CLASS AS A KID. It showed up on one of those eBay "You might also like this" [sidebars], and I was like, "I would also like that!" I tried it out with a song and then realized I had to write a song specifically for it. So it got performed once with "Undead," and ever since it's been with "Are You Experiencing?"

ANY REALLY MEMORABLE MOMENTS FROM PAST SHOWS? When I started crowd surfing, I'd bring out a surfboard and people would pass me over the audience. When I was in Brazil, instead of passing me off, some guys just ran around the crowd at high speeds with me, so that was pretty crazy.

STAR CHEF DANIEL BOULUD BRINGS HIS NAMESAKE TO BOSTON.

Bar Boulud
Mandarin Oriental, Boston, 776 Boylston St., Boston (617-535-8800)

DANIEL BOULUD'S NAME DID MORE than simply ratchet up the buzz for Bar Boulud, opening Sept. 16 in the Mandarin Oriental, Boston. It also unlocked numerous doors for chef de cuisine Aaron Chambers as he moved from New York to lead the expansion of Boulud's empire into Boston.

The Englishman rattles off the names of Jamie Bissonnette (Coppa, Toro) and Matt Delisle (L'Espalier) as two local chefs who reached out to him immediately after he arrived in Boston late last year, and Chambers credits their friendliness to the power of Boulud, the French-born chef whose eponymous restaurants have drawn crowds and praise from New York and Montreal to London and Singapore.

"Daniel is a very personable person. He'll talk to you and listen to what you have to say. A lot of the big chefs like Daniel because he's so warm and well-natured," Chambers says. "And so, Boston chefs have been very welcoming. I talked to chef Matt at L'Espalier and said, 'Where do you buy everything from? What's your main purveyor of different things?'"

Chambers has spent the past 10 months getting used to the Bay State and discovering the right sources for Bar Boulud. One of his finds is A&J King Artisan Bakers in Salem, which will use local grains (grown within 100 miles) to make a specialty bread that won't be available in other restaurants.

"It's very different being in Boston than in New York. In New York, it's overwhelming, all the products you have at your fingers. In Boston, they're here. You just have to find them and source them," Chambers says.

But bread will be far from the main culinary draw at the restaurant, which will have many of the classics found at other Bar Bouluds, such as salade Lyonnaise, coq au vin and assorted charcuterie. And there will be a Boston twist on some items: tea-smoked lobster, handmade chitarra pasta featuring Wellfleet clams and a burger called The Departed that will top a beef patty with Irish bacon, cheddar and Guinness-braised onions. The 30-page wine list, meanwhile, will focus on areas near the Lyon region where Boulud was born. Crafted by sommelier Joe Camper, who previously worked at Menton, the list is broken down into bottles from the Burgundy and Rhône regions as well as "cousin" wines that are grown elsewhere but share similar sensibilities or techniques.

If it all sounds very Daniel Boulud-centric, that's because he's been involved in all stages of the process.

"With the menu, he lets me go do my thing. Then he tries it, he tastes it, we sit down and we talk about it. We refine it and make it better," Chambers says. "He's very good with his chefs. He lets his chefs have an individual stamp on the menu, but everything is done through him and is passed by him."

PO-BOY STAYS PUT

REMEMBER THOSE SPRINGTIME RUMORS about owner Eric Cormier starting up a Po-Boy food truck, in addition to his brick-and-mortar shop in Newton? Well, it's not happening—at least, not right now. "I'm trying to focus on Po-Boy itself," says Cormier, citing the difficulty of finding "a good team" to keep everything running according to his standards. If you've enjoyed one of his "specialty sandwiches"—maybe the one stuffed with a heap of sweet, lightly fried shrimp, sauced with a remoulade whose richness is balanced by a sneaky hit of heat—you know those standards are high. And you'll know that the effusive Cormier, who's also owned a hair salon and an auto body shop, has an opinion about everything. "Oysters are funky," he says. "If you undercook 'em, people get upset, and if you overcook 'em, people get upset." Not only is he willing to share the recipe for the remoulade—spicy mustard, ketchup, mayonnaise, pickle juice and crushed pepper—he'll let you in on the secret: "The key to it all is grinding up the peppers really fine."

After a year and a half in business just around the corner from Whole Foods, Cormier says his most popular item is the catfish po'boy, and that he's always thinking of new menu items. That could include "a KFC-style bucket of chicken" he's considering for people who want to pick up dinner on the way home from work, and he's entertaining the idea of adding crawfish to the mix. Meanwhile, he's frying up some of the best onion rings in town. Go for lunch or plan to get your take-out early: Po-Boy closes at 6:30 pm.

NOT A TEASE: Now you won't have to wait until lunch for your favorite dish.

STRIP-T'S LINGERS OVER LUNCH

GOOD NEWS: IF YOU'RE CRAVING STRIP-T'S irresistible smoked turkey Reuben around dinnertime, you no longer have to postpone gratification until lunchtime the next day. That's because the Watertown eatery now offers the full lunch menu all day long, in addition to a roster of dinner specials like Bah Habah mussels with potato puree and crispy herbs and local seared tautog with corn succotash and trumpets.

STREET TREAT: Travel to Southern India by way of North Cambridge at Suvai, located in the old Curry N' Kari space.

Good Eats: Savor Suvai

Some South Indian and Sri Lankan classics, like dosa, aren't hard to come by here, but a rare find is the staple street food called kotthu roti, seen at Suvai, the new North Cambridge reincarnation of Malden's shuttered Biryani Park. Conceptually, the dish is not unlike fried rice—a stir-fry of leftover starch bulked up with egg, vegetables and meat. But in this case, the starch is soft, chewy minced flatbread tossed in a hot pan with scrambled egg, onions, chilies, chicken (if you want) and a spicy gravy called salna, as well as incredibly fragrant seasonings such as mustard and cumin seeds and fresh curry leaves. / Elizabeth Bomze

Artist Liz LaManche is ready to rock the boat with her latest project. For the past year, she's been staining the pier at the Boston Harbor Shipyard, showcasing tattoo designs reflecting the seaport's historic travelers. "The standard tourist story about Boston is very much, you know, Paul Revere and the Revolution," LaManche says. "But there's so much more to what made us who we are." The finished work, Connected by Sea, will be unveiled at the HarborArts Festival on Sept. 20; here's a peek at her sketches for a few of the designs. / Meghan Kavanaugh

Drink of the Moment
FIRE IN THE FIELDS

PRICE: $12

INVENTOR: Bar manager Alex Homans, also known as Fairsted Kitchen's "beverage shaman"

INGREDIENTS: Smoked corn-infused Privateer Silver Rum, Cocchi Americano, Meletti Amaro, lime juice, salt

FOOD FOR THOUGHT: Homans has worked as a professional chef, so he often uses dishes as a starting point for drinks. "Our society has been very interested in pairing wine and food, but... being able to have a cocktail balance out a food you're eating is, I think, as important as anything else," he says. Fairsted's lobster and corn beignet dish helped inspire him to complement the rum's butterscotch notes with the smoked corn, because, as he points out, "Butter and corn are best friends."

FAIRSTED KITCHEN
fairstedkitchen.com

BALANCING ACT: "The build of the cocktail is pretty easygoing. It's not overly sweet, it's not overly tart, it's not bitter." Homans aims for balanced flavors in any drink he puts on the menu, but he also likes to incorporate both familiar and unfamiliar ingredients. You may order a drink because it has something you recognize, but hopefully it exposes you to something new as well.

AT YOUR SERVICE: Homans says it bothers him when a bartender walks off after serving a beverage. "One of the best parts is seeing their first reaction," he says. If that reaction is not the best—corn isn't for everyone—that's OK: "I'm actively interested in you having a good time here."

PHILOSOPHY: "Be nice to people, have fun, work hard. You can teach people how to make drinks; you can't teach people how to be nice or how to have fun or how to work hard." / Sarah Hagman

DRESS IT IN: H.C.B. has brought fun fashions to a space that formerly housed a wine shop.

Purveyors: All About Her

Brookline resident Hilary Marino was in the market for a women's boutique where she could do more than just window shop, so the 27-year-old decided to start one herself. First came an online store, and now H.C.B. (Her Closet Boston) has opened its doors in Coolidge Corner, dressed to the nines in apparel and accessories for occasions both everyday and glam—bright print frocks, loose-knit pullover sweaters, two-tone ballerina skimmers, chunky heels and glitzy rhinestone jewels—all of it at real-life prices. / Elizabeth Bomze

ARTS AND CRAFTS

Cheers to Mystic Brewery's 366, a farmhouse ale whose label boasts a photo by Roslindale artist Andrew M.K. Warren. It's the first release from the Centre Street Consortium, a collabo between JP eatery Vee Vee and wine-and-beer shop Streetcar that's connecting local artists and brewers. Mystic founder Bryan Greenhagen says that Warren's Cadillac & House label "gets this beer perfectly." / Meghan Kavanaugh

BATTING FOR THE BARD

Commonwealth Shakespeare Company kicks off its 20th season with the first-ever Shakespeare at Fenway, bringing the bard to the ballpark on Sept. 19. Given the Sox's recent fortunes, we thought they'd opt for The Comedy of Errors, but the performance is actually a compilation of famous scenes from a range of plays. Here, we've matched big names from the 2014 Sox with fitting Shakespearean characters, just in case CSC needs any understudies. / Matt Martinelli

Iago from Othello (A.J. Pierzynski): The role of one of Shakespeare's purest villains goes to Pierzynski, who was hated by some fans and players long before he signed in Boston this season. When he was released midway through the season, negative stories about how he was a "dark cloud" in the clubhouse were leaked quickly.

Cordelia from King Lear (Jon Lester): King Lear cuts Cordelia out of an inheritance after she refuses to profess love to him, while Lester was cut off from the Sox (and traded to the Athletics) when he refused to settle for a below-market contract.

Romeo and Juliet (Xander Bogaerts and Jackie Bradley Jr.): It's two young star-crossed lovers and two young star-crossed hitters. Here's hoping the flaws in the youngsters' swings don't prove fatal.

Julius Caesar (David Ortiz): The Sox legend has amassed plenty of power in his dozen seasons in Boston, but this year some media, baseball officials, opposing players and even fans launched attacks at Big Papi. Et tu, Torre?

Portia from The Merchant of Venice (Rusney Castillo): While Portia had plenty of suitors in Merchant, we don't think she had 28 baseball scouts drooling over her at a showcase like Castillo did. Plot twist: In Shakespeare's play, the noblest man wins out. In baseball, the most money ($72 million) won the day.

A TRIBE OF THREE

A TRANSPORTING NOVEL DRAWS ON THE LIFE OF ANTHROPOLOGIST MARGARET MEAD.

Euphoria* by Lily King
Published by Atlantic Monthly Press, 261 pages, $25
The author grew up in Massachusetts and lives in Maine.

THE EXOTIC WORLD OF NEW GUINEA IN the 1930s is the setting for this New England Book Award-winning novel about three anthropologists: Nell—a character based on Margaret Mead—her intense husband, Fen, and their colleague Bankson. Nell and Fen have been studying a warrior tribe whose aggressive rituals include infanticide and wild dances enhanced by hallucinogens; it's taken months for Nell to convince her husband to leave them. Bankson, meanwhile, has been working solo in the field, studying a warrior tribe of his own. Isolated and haunted by his past, he's close to suicide when he encounters the couple, who pull him back from the brink. He leads them to another tribe to study, the female-dominated Tam, whose ways are more compassionate, though hardly less alarming. (Relatives of the dead mourn by cutting off a finger.)

The trio cook up revolutionary anthropological theories, but Nell and Fen's vastly different approaches cause friction—and Nell and Bankson's intellectual connection takes a tantalizingly subtle turn for the erotic. As the two begin to fall for each other, Fen's gathering lunacy and justifiable envy of his famous wife ratchet up, setting the triangle up for trouble. All the while, King captures the colorful fervor and flavor of tribal life, while rendering the anthropologists studying it with a delicate sensitivity and lyricism.

FROM PAGE 144: It is a bit of a dance we three are in. But there is a better balance when B is here, too. Fen's demanding, rigid, determined nature weighs heavily on one side of the scale, and Bankson's and my more pliant and adjustable natures on the other, equaling things out. I can't help but think I can use this inchoate theory in my work, that there is something about finding the balance to one's nature—perhaps a culture that flourishes is a culture that has found a similar balance among its people. ◆

BIG FUN. Dallas is fast becoming a standout destination in the Lone Star state.

The Escape Artist / Sarah Hagman

SOUTHERN CHARM

EVERYTHING'S WAITING FOR YOU IN DOWNTOWN DALLAS.

THE 1970S OIL BOOM BROUGHT RAPID development to Dallas and Dallas to American television screens. Suddenly, men who could have inspired J.R. Ewing's character were a dime a dozen—despite the fact that there was never a working oil well in Dallas County. In the end, that didn't matter much, as the oil speculation drove people, and with them money, to the area.

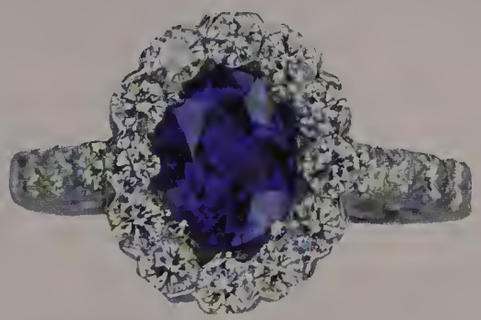
Dallas is now experiencing a boom of a different kind. With $15 billion in development, it isn't the same city it was 20 years ago, and it won't be the same in another 20. In the past two decades, it's welcomed the state's first light rail system and a professional hockey team, and the downtown population has exploded, growing from 300 residents in 1996 to 30,000 today. A few years ago, the neighborhood was all work and no play, largely shutting down after the 9-to-5 grind—but that's all changing.

There's no better evidence of the revitalization effort than Klyde Warren Park, one result of city initiatives to add green space and lure people downtown. The five-acre park, which joins uptown and downtown, sits above a freeway, though you'd never suspect cars are roaring by below at 60-plus mph. Chairs and tables dot the lawn, where you're free to play croquet and pingpong, practice your stroke at a putting green or browse through an outdoor library. Grab a bite to eat at the food trucks that surround the area, or, to escape the heat, admire the park from Savor's floor-to-ceiling windows. The gastropub's shareable desserts are priced at $3 each, so go ahead and order the whole menu. As for liquid dessert, Savor serves the highest volume of wine on tap in the country.

The park borders the arts district, 19 contiguous blocks that include four Pritzker Prize-winning architects' buildings and make for a very convenient and condensed arts experience. Nasher Sculpture Center houses works from Matisse, Picasso, Alexander Calder and many other modern sculptors, and its backyard space is equally breathtaking. Across the street, the Dallas Museum of Art offers free admission and leaves its doors open until midnight every third Friday of the month. If you're with young kids, the Perot Museum of Nature and Science is a must, though it certainly has enough activities to occupy an adult mind. And if your boots aren't made for all this walking, know that the downtown D-Link bus runs every 15 minutes and is free of charge from 11 am to 11:30 pm.

Life, of course, exists outside of downtown. Dallas is nearly 400 square miles—what's the saying about everything being bigger in Texas?—and you should try to make a dent in all it has to offer. In West Dallas, Trinity Groves is a choice destination for those who struggle with decision-making. The incubator program hosts multiple restaurant concepts, so your evening's menu could look like this: ahi tuna nachos at Chino Chinatown, Texan drafts at Luck and perhaps post-dinner hookah at Souk. And down the road you'll find local favorite brunch spot Smoke, whose hearty pancakes are nearly an inch thick.

Next, take a drive north through Highland Park, known as the Beverly Hills of Texas, for a serious case of real estate envy. Or, to the northeast, stroll amongst 300,000 tulips (the most outside of Holland) in the Dallas Arboretum. Pack a picnic, including a bottle of wine, and sit beside White Rock Lake with a view of downtown in the distance. If you prefer to have someone else do the cooking, head to Komali, where the chef—a native of Mexico City—cooks up authentic south-of-the-border cuisine. (Go for the queso fundido and house prickly pear margarita.)



Wherever you choose to explore, when you retreat downtown for a good night's rest, you must lay your head at the Joule. The walls are filled with the owner's collection of contemporary art, from Andy Warhol to Richard Phillips, and on the 10th floor you'll find a glass pool that juts out eight feet over the street below. You'll end up buying a few Taschen coffee table books showcased in the lobby and be tempted to slip the sumptuous sheets into your carry-on. A block away you'll find the flagship Neiman Marcus, but the hotel is also home to shopping destination TENOVERSIX, which stocks designers like Pamela Love and Opening Ceremony. Enjoy at least one meal at the hotel's restaurant, CBD Provisions, which has deservedly been getting national attention and serves breakfast, lunch and dinner. Their family-style main courses are meant to be shared, so as you pack your suitcase, remember to come with a big appetite—and bigger pants. ◆

EVERY AUTUMN, BOSTON GREETS SWARMS OF newly minted undergraduates, many hailing from quiet towns with few dining options beyond mediocre chain restaurants. What wonderment they must feel alighting in a neighborhood like Allston, with its rich tapestry of affordable international cuisines. If you remember the first time you had real ramen, Shanghainese soup dumplings or unbowdlerized Thai food, you might share my envy of the new kids: The more adventurous ones are about to enter a far wider, more fascinating world of food. Lulu's, a new Allston bar and restaurant, offers an eclectic-sounding menu that seems pitched at these budding gastronauts, but delivers rather more conventional flavors on the plate.

Not that there's anything wrong with that. It's easy to enjoy a kitschy bar bite like Mexican Cheetos ($3), a fresher, housemade version of the classic junk-food snack, though the accompanying salsa Tapatío is a weird match. It's tough not to love warm soft pretzel rolls ($3) with their dusting of garlic and smoky salts, especially with a dip of cheese sauce ($1). Allston wings ($10) are a fine plate of wings with the expected crudites and bleu cheese dip, though the advertised smoke flavor isn't very pronounced. Wild game chili ($4 cup, $7 bowl) made from chopped wild boar and buffalo is very nice in the Texas bowl-of-red school, though it doesn't bring much capsicum fire.

Revival mussels ($10) is a generous bowl of big, chewy PEI bivalves in a beer broth dotted with chunks of smoky linguiça, but despite the advertised herbs and garlic, it's a trifle bland. Mama's fried chicken ($14) shows good frying technique, its coating nicely ungreasy and crisp, but it is quite underseasoned; at least the accompanying chunky mashed potatoes are excellent. Porter-braised pork shank ($15) is an impressive hunk of meltingly tender meat on the bone, prettily coated with pistachio gremolata and resting on more of those fine mashed potatoes, but it too is hobbled by a pernicious lack of salt. A Thai quinoa black bean burger ($11) needs some work: The dollop of red coconut-milk curry is a good idea, but the brioche roll needs toasting, the patty itself is unpleasantly mushy, failing to hold together, and the accompanying hand-cut fries are disappointingly limp. A Korean BBQ pork sandwich ($12) with kimchi on toasted ciabatta fares better, but bears too little of the soy, garlic, ginger and gochuchang punch of its namesake.

Executive chef Sarah Wade seems to be on firmer ground when currying her customers' sweet tooths. Simple desserts like chef's donut holes ($6) with warm chocolate sauce show why fried-to-order dough remains a popular fairground treat. Grandma's warm caramel apple monkey bread ($6) with cream cheese sauce is like a gourmand's version of Cinnabon: a gooey fat-and-sugar bomb of which the guilty excess is part of the pleasure. The American penchant for dessert-for-breakfast is also indulged at weekend brunch in dishes like a caramel apple parfait ($6) with layers of apple compote, house granola and vanilla yogurt topped with caramel sauce. Hey, yogurt is good for you, right? There's no such sop to wholesomeness with s'mores pancakes ($11) layered and topped with mini marshmallows and chocolate chips—just the thing for your bratty inner 5-year-old.

Sugariness also extends to the house cocktails, a consequence of a license that only allows sweetened and/or fruit-flavored spirits. It's not great for cocktail drinkers who have outgrown chocolatinis, but the Maine Negroni ($12) uses a honey-sweetened gin that doesn't throw off the balance of bitter Campari and Antica Formula too much. The fairly short wine list of two dozen bottles ($30-$50) and 20 wines by the glass ($7-$11) is admirably value-priced, but won't be a draw for your wine-snob friends. By far the best news at Lulu's is its impressive beer list: more than 50 in bottles ($4-$12) and 50 draft pint pours, providing an excellent range of styles for every taste and level of beer wonkiness. The noisy 87-seat room and 18-seat bar follows a familiar template—industrial-warehouse materials and sparseness, exposed rafters, Edison bulbs everywhere—while the waitstaff embodies an artless enthusiasm that seems well-suited for its mostly barely-of-drinking-age customers. In the end, Lulu's kitchen won't beguile the palates of emerging food nerds, but not every Allston restaurant need channel the mother cuisine of some distant homeland. Some freshmen are never going to swoon over Egyptian shawarma; they're too homesick for the mild, sweetish comforts of their folks' American home cooking. For those diners, Lulu's has just the prescription. ◆

➜ Boston-based pop-up party organizer The Good Ones hosted its Eat. Play. Love event at Tico on Aug. 24. The evening highlighted Cape Ann Fresh Catch, a nonprofit promoting local, sustainable seafood. The 100 guests were treated to a cook-off between chefs Brendan Burke and Ben Harwood and a performance by hip-hop hula hoopers.

➜ Zoo New England held its fifth annual Brew at the Zoo on Aug. 16. Guests sipped samples from 38 breweries and tried cuisine from 17 local restaurants and vendors while visiting animals in the Tropical Forest Pavilion. Nearly 2,400 people attended the event, raising $108,000 to support the zoo's education programs and conservation initiatives.

Q: EXACTLY WHAT IS MICRODERMABRASION AND HOW DO I KNOW IF IT IS RIGHT FOR ME?

A: Microdermabrasion is an excellent procedure for all skin types. It provides gentle, yet effective, exfoliation which removes dead skin cells as well as excess oil.

If you have oily skin, left untreated, these dead skin cells will clog pores, which may lead to pimples or blackheads. If you have normal or dry skin, the removal of these dead skin cells gives your skin a healthy glow and improved texture. Over time, microdermabrasion stimulates new collagen production, reducing the appearance of fine lines and uneven skin tone.

There are two types of microdermabrasion and we have both available at SkinHealth Centers. A traditional microdermabrasion treatment, has a handpiece that delivers a stream of very fine mineral crystals to buff away the outermost layer of dead skin cells. An alternative form of microdermabrasion uses diamond tips to achieve the same result. In both types the handpiece also provides suction to simultaneously vacuums away the exfoliated cells and excess oil.

Immediately after your treatment you will see a nice difference - your skin will have a fresh glow and feel smoother and softer.

NO BONES ABOUT IT

SNL VETERANS' COMIC TRIUMPH IS NOTHING TO BE DEPRESSED OVER.

In movies like 2009's Adventureland and 2011's Bridesmaids (a picture she co-wrote), former Saturday Night Live player Kristen Wiig demonstrated not only her knack for comedy, but a barely glimpsed flair for the dramatic. And beyond the drama, there's also been an air of sadness to Wiig's performances. Director Craig Johnson and his cowriter, Mark Heyman (Black Swan), were smart to recognize this, fashioning their new film, The Skeleton Twins, around the actress's hilariously melancholy talents. Fitting, for a dramatic comedy that's built on a backbone of chronic depression.

When we first see Wiig's Maggie, a dental hygienist living in New York's Rockland County, she's in her bathroom, about to swallow a fistful of pills. She's stopped, however, by a phone call informing her that her fraternal twin, Milo, has just attempted to end his life, as we've already learned from the blood mixing with the water in his bathtub during the movie's opening scene.

As good as Wiig is in the film, the real revelation is her longtime SNL cast mate Bill Hader, who plays Milo, a self-described "tragic gay cliché" who hasn't seen his sibling in a decade. It would be easy to dismiss Hader's performance as a feature-length version of his "Stefon" character from the late-night sketch show, but there's a depth to Milo that cuts deeper than that flamboyant club-kid caricature—certainly deeper than the slits Milo carved in his wrists—although some of Stefon's gleefully warped sensibility surfaces in Milo's suicide note, which reads, "To whom it may concern: see you later," punctuated with a smiley face.

And really, that about sums up the tone of the film; the script from old college friends Johnson and Heyman goes into some dark corners, but it always emerges in a happier place. Mind you, this undercuts the movie's resolution, but if it's emotional catharsis you want, it's catharsis you'll get. You'll get a bellyful of laughs, too. And really, isn't that what most people want from a film headlining the SNL veterans?

So, after Maggie travels out to Los Angeles to be there for her estranged brother, the comic sparks begin to fly. One can surmise that they'd have an easy rapport from having worked alongside each other on live TV for more than half a decade, but Maggie and Milo are just about the most believable siblings ever seen on the big screen.

Despite whatever drove these two apart, you believe that the reluctant Milo would be willing to return to the East Coast with Maggie, since the history they share is palpable. These are damaged people, but you sense they became damaged together—and their laughter, missing for so long, becomes their key to coping.

Back where he began, in the town he left with dreams of making it as an actor, Milo's loath to admit that his ambition has led him to waiting tables at "a shitty tourist restaurant in Hollywood." Instead, when he runs into Rich (Ty Burrell, humanizing a tricky role), his former high school English teacher, Milo informs him he's "here for a writer's retreat." But really, he's returned to try to rekindle the secret, inappropriate relationship that nearly destroyed teacher and student years before.

Secrets are something the siblings share. Maggie might have been saved from a fatal overdose when a ringing phone interfered, but she had managed to swallow some pills—of the birth control variety—which would come as a big surprise to her supportive blue-collar husband, Lance (Luke Wilson), who believes they've been trying to have a baby for two years.

Lance is "like a big Labrador retriever," Milo observes, and the big lug is as naively happy as one, oblivious to his wife's blossoming infidelity with her Aussie scuba instructor (Boyd Holbrook).

"I know. It sounds like a porno," Maggie tells Milo when they finally begin to reconnect over hits of nitrous oxide taken after-hours at her office. "He doesn't deserve a whore as a wife," she concludes.

"You're not a whore," Milo interjects. "You're a restless housewife with whore-like tendencies." That's a funny line, but the real comic highlight comes when the two drunkenly lip synch to Starship's "Nothing's Gonna Stop Us Now." It's one of those Movie Moments that should feel forced, with Johnson indulging his performers, holding on this seemingly improvised bit for the song's duration. However, it feels right, and true; this is what Maggie and Milo would do, and in the hands of Wiig and Hader, it organically subverts cliché, instead becoming transcendent.

Save for a perfectly modulated, vulnerable speech Hader makes concerning Milo's belief that he peaked in high school, the rest of the film remains fairly earthbound, filled with less-than-revealing details like a missing mother (Joanna Gleason, working wonders in an underwritten role) and a dead father.

Despite dipping into formula, The Skeleton Twins still pulls off the miracle of remaining funny while honestly dealing with the subject of depression. It's those who are closest who are capable of hurting each other the most, and as much as Milo and Maggie might try to sabotage everything good and stable in their lives, it's their laughter that guides them—and us—through. ◆

ENTWINED

CAROLINA COUPLE TRADES DIVE BAR HOOTENANNIES FOR AMERICANA FAME.

Cary Ann Hearst and Michael Trent share practically everything. Aside from being married, they write engaging songs together as Shovels & Rope. And when the gothic Americana duo performs, they swap off on a drum kit, guitars and plucky vocals, sometimes singing on one microphone to boost the passionate intimacy. So it's no surprise that they like to do phone interviews together, bouncing off each other in conversation like they do in their music.

Take the subject of happy hour gigs the duo played only a few years back in Charleston, South Carolina. "Kids were wandering around and taking a few bucks that were in our tip jar and running off," Hearst says, while Trent pipes in, "Actually, babies were always the best tippers 'cause the babies liked to put money in the tip jar."

The couple's not hurting for tips these days. Shovels & Rope hit Royale on Sept. 26 and 27 after graduating to main stages at summer festivals like Newport Folk and cracking the Billboard Top 20 with their just-released third album, Swimmin' Time.

"At first it was a little more separated," Hearst says of their musical partnership, which grew out of sitting in with each other when they were billed under their own names on the Southern club circuit. "It was a challenge for us initially because there was a lot of our own personal ego to take out of it."

That didn't last. In 2008, the two musicians made a joint album called Shovels & Rope, a nod to the murder ballads they favored. They got married in 2009 and eventually committed to the band name Shovels & Rope, a move that gave them both a brand identity and ensured they wouldn't have to work apart.

"It kinda turned everything up on its ass so that now we're virtually interchangeable within the band."

"About 400 shows into our career, we found ourselves fluidly going between each other's songs," Hearst says. "It kinda turned everything up on its ass so that now we're virtually interchangeable within the band. I can't play electric guitar like Michael, and he can't hit some of my high notes. But we have flexibility."

That means expanding their instrumental roles. Shovels & Rope have broadened and honed their palette since the duo broke out with their 2012 album O' Be Joyful. The range of Swimmin' Time, produced at home by Trent, kicks in early with four consecutive tracks. The garage-blues "Evil" mines similar territory to Jack White with its deep, distorted organ ballast. The ballad "After the Storm" more closely evokes Radiohead's "Creep" in its chord progression and epic buildup, Hearst's voice cracking with emotion. "Fish Assassin" swings as a snappin,' stompin' field holler, while "Coping Mechanism" finds Hearst and Trent tapping early rock 'n' roll and doo-wop, their voices dancing in call, response and affirmation.

"The spectrum's wider in both directions," Hearst says. "Whether we tend to be a bit folksy on one song or have a heavier or more aggressive sound on another, the core of what we do is these narratives or imagery."

The haunting final track, "Thresher," even takes a humanistic angle, ruminating on the U.S. submarine of that name, which imploded off Cape Cod in 1963, taking all 129 members of its crew. Trent says he caught a History Channel piece and did research to write a song "trying to capture the feeling of what was going on inside the submarine when they realized that they weren't coming back up."

It's all quite a growth curve for two musicians who inherited their first kick drum from a trash-picking friend. "That was part of our bar-survival method," Trent says. "We started out with a tambourine and couldn't get people to [quiet down] with that. And then we got a box to stomp on, and that wasn't loud enough."

In turn, they've also traded their old van for an RV that they share with their dog, named after Texas folksinger Townes Van Zandt. Hearst says, "Everyone that we love, that we live with, is with us all the time." ◆

FORGET IT!

WE'RE LOSING OUR MINDS—OR I'VE AT LEAST MISPLACED MINE.

I'M DRIVING DOWN THE ROAD ON THE WAY TO get some lunch when a troubling thought occurs to me: Did I put the plug in my boat? A few minutes earlier, I'd put it in the water, tied it to the dock and parked the trailer before setting off in search of a sandwich. But with sickening surety, I remember that I spaced out on an important part of the boat-launching procedure. The one that makes the difference between a boat and a submarine.

So I whip a U-turn and race back toward the dock, gripped by the icy fear that I'll arrive just in time to see the stern pitch into the air and slide beneath the waves, Titanic style. My idiocy is the iceberg, towering and merciless.

My brother-in-law, Rick, is riding shotgun, and as we screech up to the dock he says, "She's sitting awfully low!" I discover the drain plug sitting in the cup holder, right where I left it, the automatic bilge pump losing the battle. I plunge my arm overboard and manage to get the plug threaded, not a moment too soon. My usual low-level absentmindedness—like, say, brewing a pot of hot water because I forgot to add coffee—nearly just manifested in an insurance claim and a story that I would surely never hear the end of. I resolve that from this point forward, I will live in the moment and concentrate on the matter at hand rather than daydreaming and multitasking my way into bad situations.

So we go to lunch, and I get the fish sandwich that I'd been thinking about while launching the boat. The next day, I realize that I left my credit card at the restaurant. What the hell is wrong with me?

What's wrong, I've come to believe, is that we're in the midst of a mind-fart epidemic. We're ambushed by so much information, so generally aware that we're always missing out on something, that any remotely mundane task prompts us to dwell on the possible rather than the actual. Bodily you're sitting at a boring red light, so mentally you're toying with the idea of that Groupon for Bermuda. Mmm, nice. So nice in Bermuda. Except for all the honking.

Your mind wanders and before you know it, you've driven home and forgotten to pick up your kid at someone's house. (That happened recently. Not our kid, but our house.) Or you've shown up at the airport for a flight that won't leave for 13 hours, because you spaced on the difference between am and pm while you were booking. (Luckily there was also a morning flight, for a $50 change fee.) Or you put the boat in the water with the trailer still strapped tight at the stern. You'd be surprised how much there is to remember with boats.

A few days after the foundering boat and the forgotten credit card, I hit the grocery store for a few items. Per usual, there is one human cashier for the entire store, so I head to the self-checkout aisle and blaze through, undaunted by even the codeless produce. (I am like the quick-draw Billy the Kid of weighing sugar snap peas at self-checkout.) I'm even gonna double down on life-hack efficiency and get $40 cash back, thus delaying a trip to the ATM.

But when I go to pay, I'm derailed by the store loyalty-card discount, which isn't showing up on the grand total. So I approach the bench and plead with the cashier magistrate, who hears my case and benevolently rules in my favor, punching in a code that unlocks many sweet discounts. I triumphantly collect my goodies and head home. Where I discover, some time later, that I'm short $40. My cash back is still back—at the register or, more likely, long ago pocketed by the next person in line. My determination to get four avocados for five dollars enabled self-checkout to pull a total Ocean's Eleven-style heist, the ol' rope-a-dope. I spend the rest of the afternoon resenting whoever collected my money and constructing dark scenarios of how they spent it. I wish I had a more positive worldview, but I'm certain that most of it went to krokodil and Jeff Dunham tickets with maybe a little set aside for ISIS.

Not long after this debacle, I hit the Dunkin' drive-through for an iced coffee. They're running a promotion, so it's only a dollar plus tax. I give the cashier two dollars, and she proceeds to return more than that in change—change, in fact, for the full-price coffee. I hand it back to her. "Oops," she says. "That's the second time I've done that today."

I drive away feeling good, until I realize that she forgot to give me a straw. ◆

What's wrong, I've come to believe, is that we're in the midst of a mind-fart epidemic.

Soroff On / Nat Faxon

MAN OF MANY TALENTS

THE MULTIHYPHENATE STAR OF MARRIED DISHES ON SKETCH COMEDY, SPIRIT GUM AND HIS MOST PAINFUL AUDITION.

ACTOR, COMEDIAN AND ACADEMY AWARD-WINNING screenwriter Nat Faxon, 39, was raised in Manchester-by-the-Sea and attended the Holderness School in New Hampshire before studying theater at Hamilton College. He joined the LA-based comedy troupe the Groundlings in 2001 and remained a member for 10 years. In 2011, he won an Oscar for Best Adapted Screenplay for The Descendants, starring George Clooney, and he also co-wrote the acclaimed film The Way, Way Back starring Steve Carell and Toni Collette. Perhaps best known for his starring role in the Fox comedy Ben and Kate, he has appeared on numerous television shows and portrays Russ Bowman on the FX comedy Married. He is also currently co-writing two feature films, one starring Kristen Wiig. He lives in Los Angeles with his wife and three children.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Do you relate to Russ Bowman?
NAT FAXON: Probably too much. I'm pretty much the same guy. That's why it felt so right to do this project. I guess I'm in a better financial position than Russ, but I have said I was going to work and instead went surfing. I have never gotten a hall pass, but I've wanted one at several moments. Married and raising three kids? There are a lot of similarities.

Which of his traits would make your wife say, "That's so totally you." Maybe not being a great communicator. My wife has said many times that things would be a lot easier if I just used my words.

So where do you keep your Oscar? I wish there was an answer like "In my bathroom, because I take baths with it," but it's actually on the mantel, right next to broken parts of toys, missing puzzle pieces and other small things that my youngest will try to eat.

Was it weird hearing George Clooney say words that you wrote? Yeah. It's kinda weird any time someone says words that you wrote. It always feels a little strange. You had them in your head, but having them spoken out loud by Academy Award-winning talent is all that much more surreal.

Has he invited you to his villa in Lake Como? No, and I'll tell you what. It's bullshit. Hopefully the invitation will be coming ASAP...just as soon as he can figure out who the hell I am.

Do you find acting or writing more gratifying? Acting is probably more enjoyable, because there's the immediate gratification of it. Writing can feel very solitary, and you become neurotic and crazy, which is why I have a brilliant writing partner.

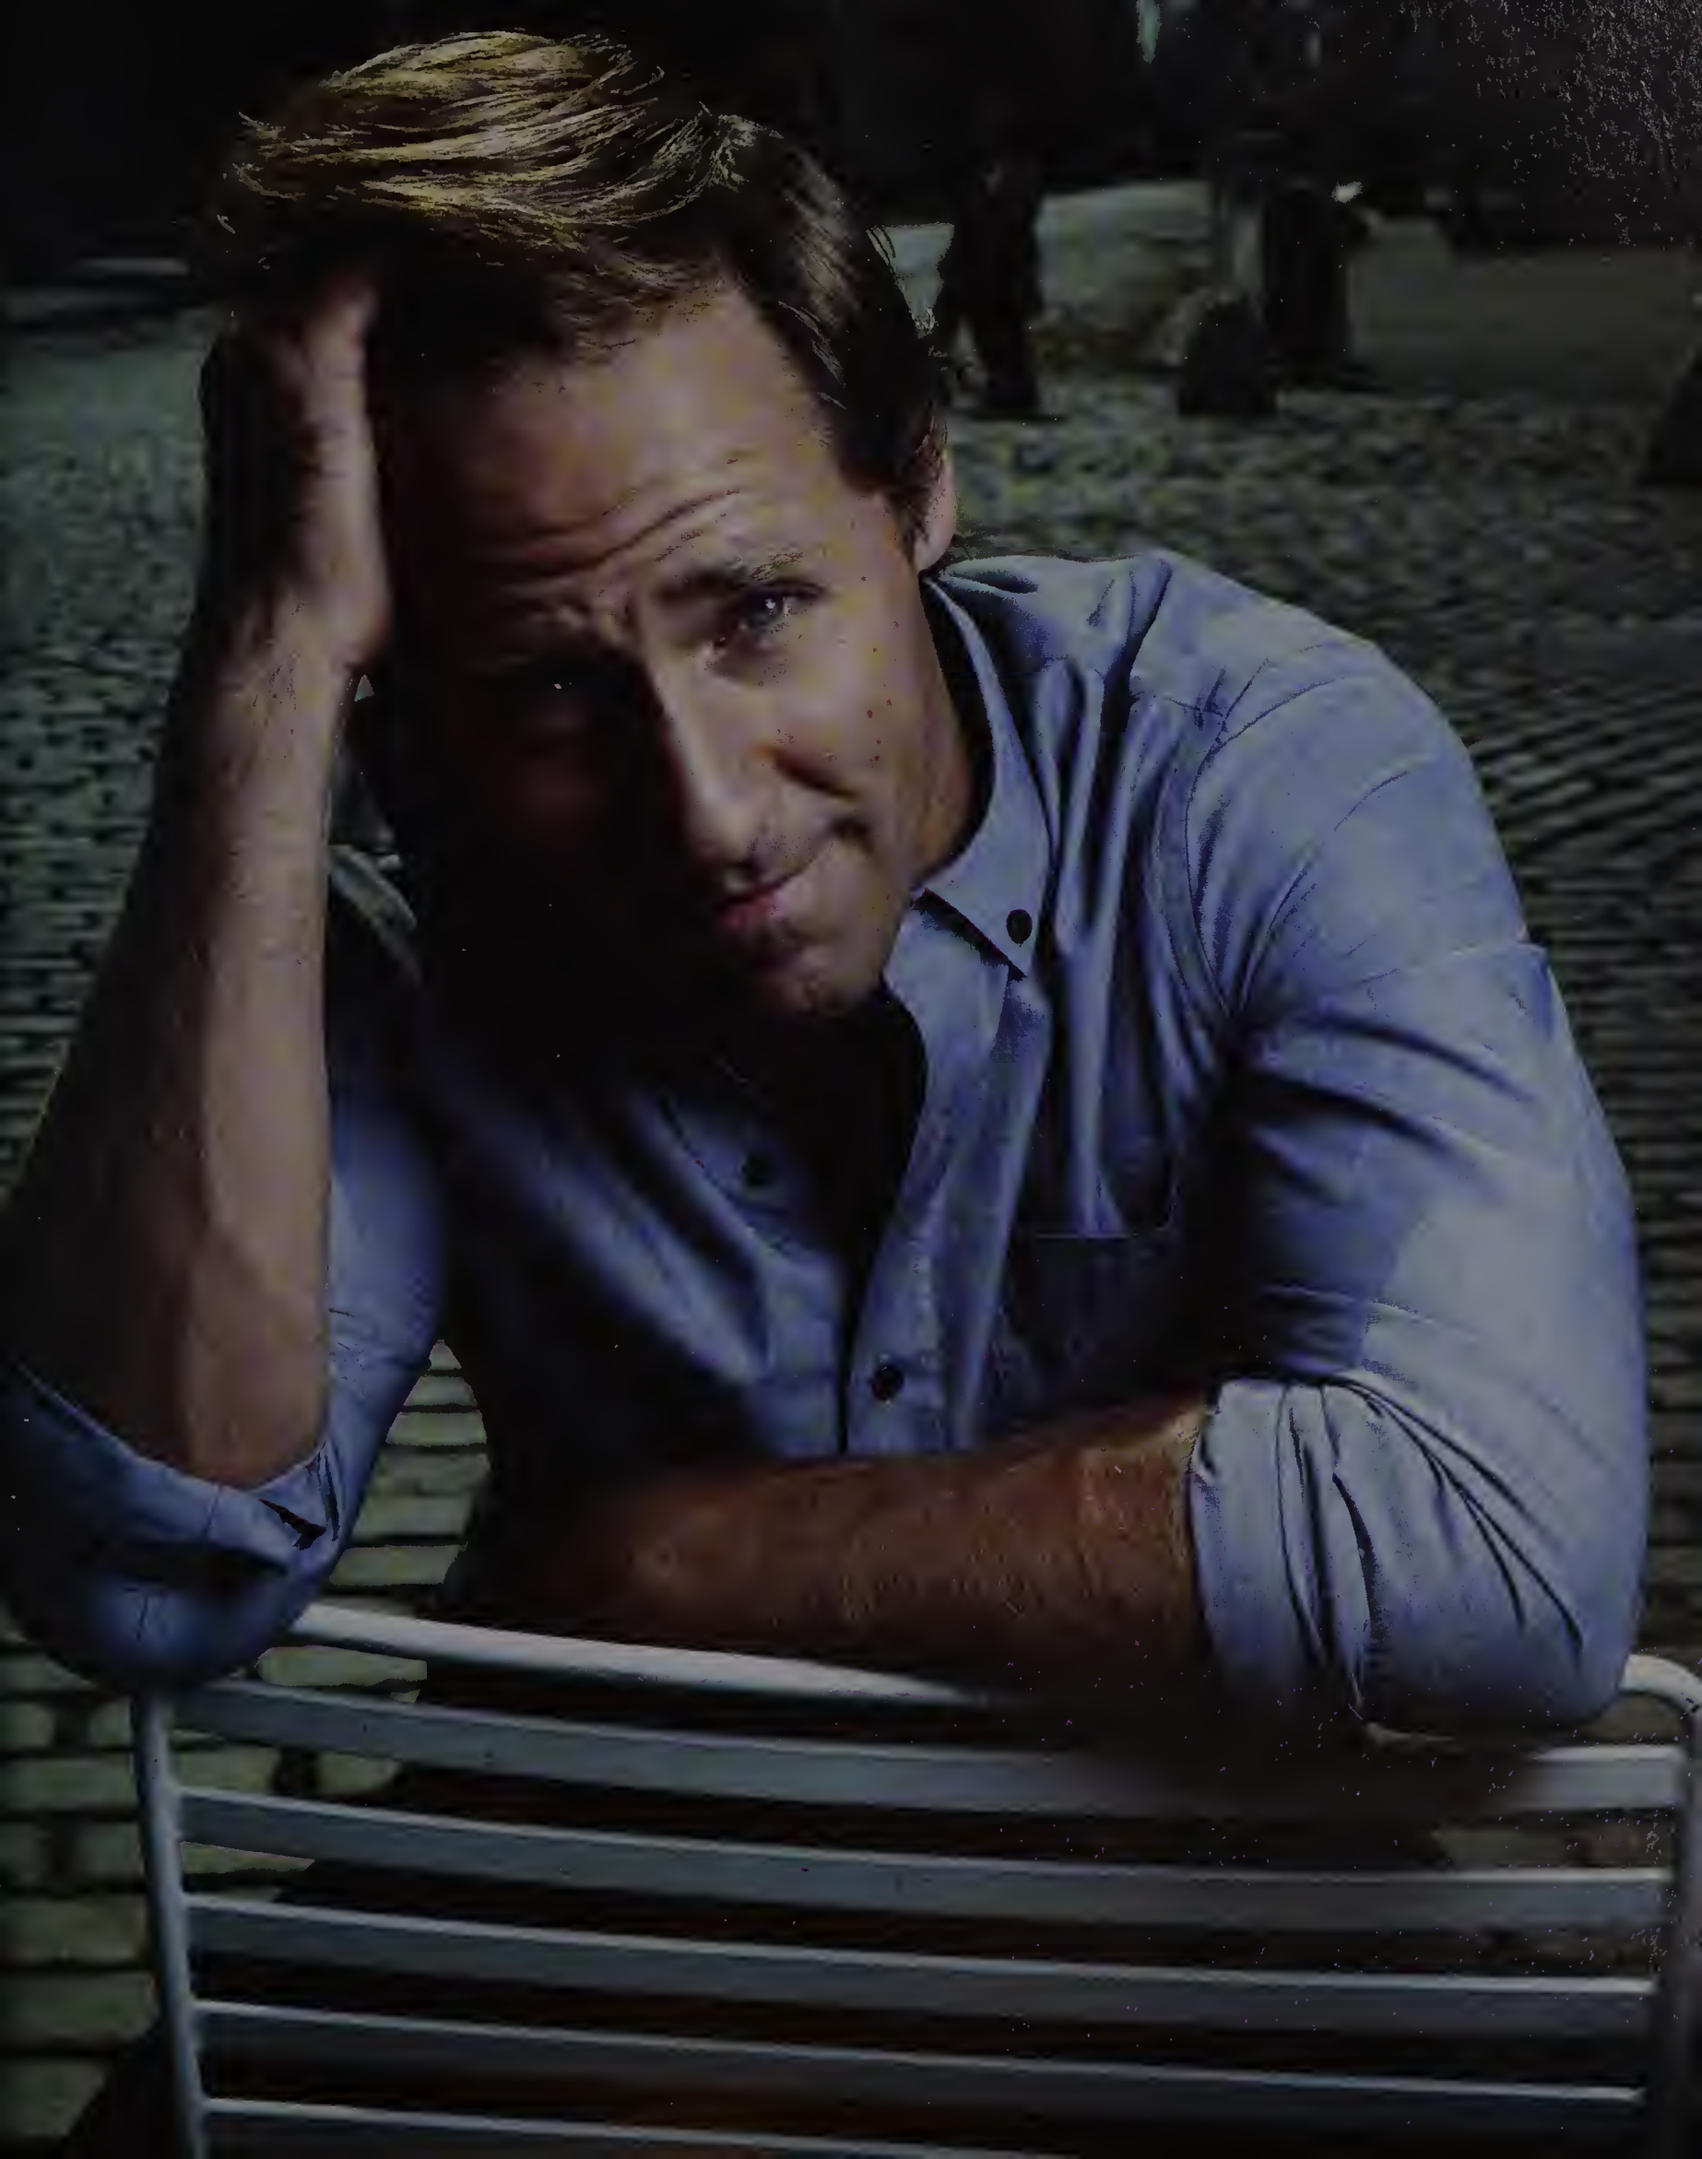
Which is harder: comedy or drama? For me? Drama. In comedy, you know whether it's funny or not. Either people are laughing, or they're looking at you like you just took a big deuce in the room. As a theater major, doing serious material, it was always much harder to tell if it was working or not.

Any aspirations to be on SNL? I did. I grew up watching Dana Carvey, Phil Hartman, Mike Myers and all those guys, and I loved those sketches. I dreamt about doing that. Then as I got older and joined the Groundlings, a lot of my friends and people I worked with ended up going to SNL and becoming huge stars. I did audition once, and they had us do a live improv show in front of an audience, with Lorne Michaels front and center. Instead of doing what improv demands and working off each other, making each other look good, everyone was trying to outshine and upstage everyone else, and it was just a disaster.

What does sketch comedy teach you? That wigs and mustaches are funny and important. Make sure you have good spirit gum. Seriously? It taught me a lot in terms of writing. Creating a three- to five-page story is not much different than creating a 30-page TV show or a 100-page screenplay. You have to have all the same elements in place. Doing sketch comedy was like a graduate course in writing.

Whom do people compare you to? A lot of people say Seth Meyers, but Jay Leno said I looked like a Kennedy who was hit in the face with a lead pipe. So I guess somewhere between those two.

Anything you wish you could erase from your resume? I have a lot of auditions I wish I could take back. I played hockey growing up, and I was pretty good. When I got out here, I tried to pad my resume with the stupidest things for skills—things like foosball, pool, pingpong. And of course, I included hockey in bold. I got a call, and they said, "Head out to this rink with your skates." I show up and I go out on the ice, and they said, "Are you ready?" I said, "I'm not sure," and they pressed play on this big boom box. "Greased Lightning" started blaring. Apparently, I was auditioning for Grease on Ice, and instead of saying, "I'm not right for this," I proceeded to act like an amazing figure skater. I kept wiping out, but for the finale, I figured I'd finish big, so I skated over to one corner and came flying at the camera with the intention of throwing up my arms and going down on my knees...except that I misjudged my speed. I fell to my knees, yelled, "Nat Faxon!" and slammed really hard into the boards.



"You know whether it's funny or not. Either people are laughing or they're looking at you like you just took a big deuce..."

What part of The Way, Way Back do you relate to the most? The setting of that movie was inspired by my childhood memories from summers on Nantucket—the idea of a place that opens for the summer and it's a community of people you only see that time of year. And it's kind of like spring break for adults. Parents don't really parent that much. The kids run free, and the parents get drunk. It was that very nostalgic feeling of freedom and escape from normal day-to-day life.

Worst job you ever had? I worked on Nantucket for The Inquirer and Mirror. I was stuck in the basement where the printing press was, with six elderly women, and we collated the newspaper. There was no radio. It was frowned upon to wear headphones. It was deadeningly boring and tedious.

Actor you'd most like to work with? Why not shoot for the moon here and say Meryl Streep. I think she'd probably pick me if asked the same question, by the way. ◆

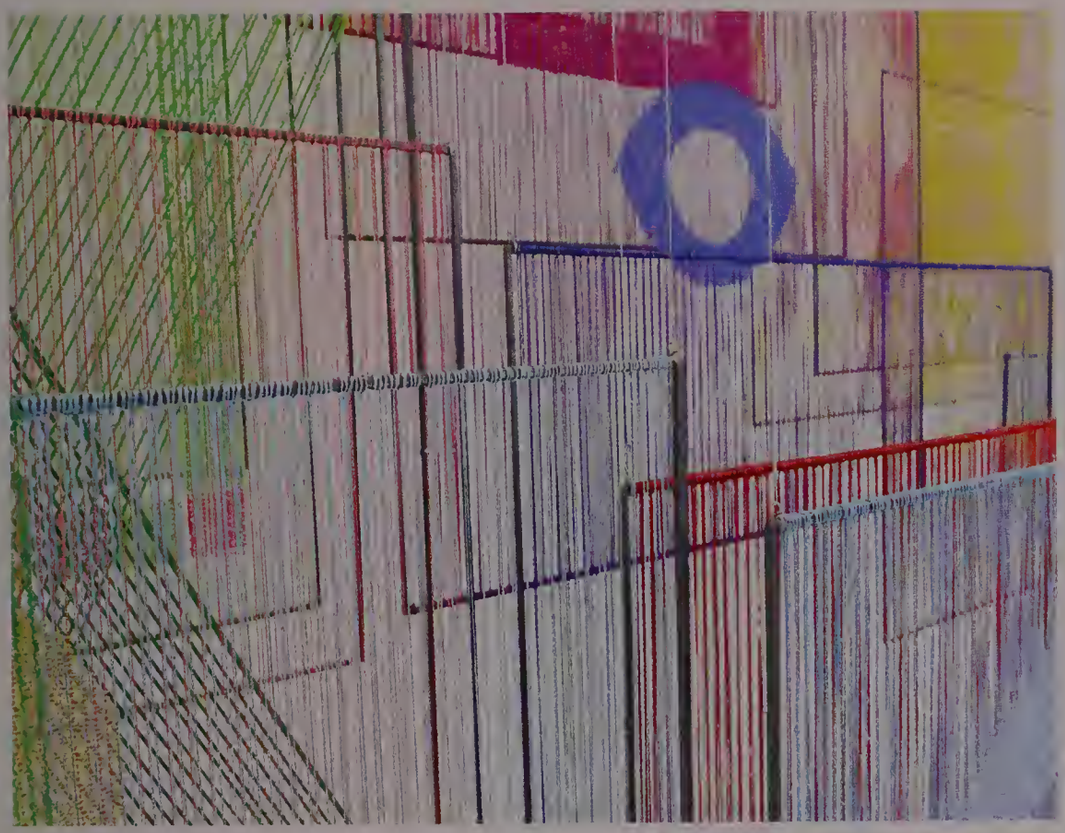
DARING DUOS

The season's most exciting arts happenings meet their matches.



BY THE IMPROPER STAFF

GLOBETROTTING DANCE

Dance connoisseurs can satisfy their wanderlust this season without so much as a trip to Logan. First, September's iFest brings Riverdance to the waterfront for a special 20th anniversary performance, with the Chieftans' Paddy Moloney joining the steppers onstage and co-director Padraic Moyles leading master classes anyone can join. But that's just the beginning of the three-day celebration of Irish culture. "You've got five hours [each day] to explore over three floors and an outdoor space," says CEO Rachel Kelly, who's worked for three years to gather ambassadors for this inaugural extravaganza. One ticket buys you tastings with Jameson Whiskey distillers, cooking demos from the likes of Barbara Lynch, film screenings, panel discussions, a costume design showcase and samplings of Guinness stew, shepherd's pie and—Kelly's favorite—salmon on brown Irish soda bread with Ballymaloe relish. Then, in November, Celebrity Series brings Mexico City-based contemporary choreographer Tania Pérez-Salas and her Compañia de Danza (pictured) back to Massachusetts for the first time since their 2006 Jacob's Pillow performance. In their Boston debut, the 13-member troupe explores Mexican culture in one of the company's most recent works, Made in Mexico, along with modern troubles that disturb our dreams in excerpts from Ex-Stasis. Take advantage of the bathroom break during intermission, as the dancers will also take on a piece inspired by an Ivan Illich essay, Waters of Forgetfulness, complete with a pool of 500 gallons of water.

THREAD ALERTS

In the right hands, the softest of materials can be transformed into art with undeniable edge. That'll be clear in Fiber: Sculpture 1960–present, a landmark touring exhibit premiering at the Institute of Contemporary Art. Highlighting the diversity and dynamism of a long under-recognized medium, the 50 works on view apply traditional techniques associated with craft—weaving, crochet, braiding and beyond—to abstract and conceptual sculptures spanning walls, ceilings and floors, like Elsi Giauque's Spatial Element (pictured), a fragmented grid of 20 colorfully threaded frames, and Françoise Grossen's Inchworm, a knotted rope form that, diminutive title be damned, stretches some 20 feet. (Also not to be missed: The Untitled Still Life Collection, a duet conceived by famed choreographer Trajal Harrell and artist Sarah Sze, which will be performed in concert with the exhibit Oct. 4-5, with a key supporting role played by a piece of thread.) Want to try making some fiber art of your own? Take pointers from the Yahn Bomb Squad—a Jamaica Plain-based brigade of stealth knitters who create fiber art on urban canvases—at a Yarn Bombing on Oct. 5. Held at the Eliot School of Fine & Applied Arts, the free talk and demo is one of scores of unique events happening citywide as part of the fall installment of ArtWeek Boston from Sept. 26 through Oct. 5.

ACTS OF FAITH

Modern spins on two of the world's most ancient religions take center stage this fall in a couple of New England premiere productions—which just so happen to open on the same day. Company One's The Displaced Hindu Gods Trilogy serves up three 90-minute plays by Aditi Brennan Kapil: Brahman/i: A One Hijra Stand-Up Comedy Show, a routine riffing on teen angst and gender transitioning; The Chronicles of Kaliki, a comic book-style thriller set amid high school mean girls; and Shiv, a post-colonial family drama and love story peppered with magical realism. Viewable in any order, the three plays draw inspiration from the Hindu deities Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva, but Shiv director Summer Williams says the central themes are universal. "I think there is something about it that resonates with everyone," she says. "There's a really interesting tension between the past and the present, and where those two intersect." The same could be said about SpeakEasy Stage Company's Bad Jews (pictured), a play by Joshua Harmon about two cousins—one loudly and proudly devout, the other decidedly secular, with a shiksa girlfriend—who are each vying for an heirloom their late grandfather carried with him during the Holocaust. Both productions use humor to explore serious subjects. "Laughter can be many things: covering up our discomforts, rejecting someone for their stupidity or accepting them because we see our faults in them," says Bad Jews director Rebecca Bradshaw. "The hard realities and truths of this piece will land in moments of silence."

MUSIC ON THE MOVE

Even the biggest rock stars have experienced grueling travels across the country (or countries) in cramped vans filled with gear, sweaty bandmates and sweatier roadies, fueled by junk food, booze—and, often, more illicit substances—and a love for what they do. It's a not-so-glamorous side of the life of a musician, but many will tell you that some of their best memories were forged while clocking miles en route to the next gig. Such are the stories featured in the Nave Gallery Annex's upcoming exhibit I've Been Everywhere, Man: Musicians on the Road, named for lyrics penned by Geoff Mack and immortalized by Johnny Cash. The Nave put out its call for art to artists, musicians and road crews alike, so expect all sorts of perspectives on the highs and lows of life on tour. Lucky for us, we won't have to hit the road to catch some good tunes. The Berklee BeanTown Jazz Festival (pictured), featuring a bill of fine musicians who likely have some tour stories of their own, returns to the South End for its 14th installment with the theme "Jazz: The Global Ambassador." Featuring local musicians (including Berklee students) and national stars like former Prince collaborator Sheila E., the fest is, as always, totally free and open to the public. Sprawling on Columbus Ave., with multiple stages of music and a host of food and craft vendors, the all-day block party boasts an eclectic lineup including Brooklyn-based jazz-funk outfit Snarky Puppy, local jazz songstress Grace Kelly, Berklee prof Bill Banfield's Jazz Urbane and Grammy winner Dionne Farris.

BRIGHT IDEAS

The city's arts scene will be staying up late for Illuminus, a festival filling the SoWa district with interactive art, multimedia installations and immersive performances on Oct. 25. It's Boston's first-ever Nuit Blanche, a concept that's brought free nighttime creative festivals everywhere from Toronto and New York to Brussels and Bucharest. "The goal is to make a museum without walls and activate public space," says Jeff Grantz of Materials & Methods, the Boston-based design and creative production studio that's organizing the festival, as well as contributing some sure-to-be-stunning light projections and installations that can respond to sound and other cues. Of course, Illuminus isn't the only high-profile art happening involving projected light this season. On Nov. 16, the Harvard Art Museums will reveal the results of a six-year renovation and expansion as the Fogg, Busch-Reisinger and Arthur M. Sackler museums reopen under one roof in a new facility designed by starchitect Renzo Piano. Its debut special exhibition is Mark Rothko's Harvard Murals, featuring works by the abstract expressionist, including five [illegible] rich hues faded while on display in the '60s [illegible] University dining room with floor-to-ceiling [illegible] and Lithol Red pigment evidently [illegible] decades in storage, but has been restored with help from a [illegible] developed by scientists from the Harvard Art [illegible] The projections will be [illegible] view the murals as [illegible] trick of the light, as they were [illegible] Rothko.

DELIGHTFULLY DEMENTED HUMOR

On Comedy Central's Broad City, Abbi Jacobson and Ilana Glazer pack a powerful one-two punch, playing off-kilter versions of themselves as Abbi and Ilana, two broke 20-somethings living in New York without much ambition beyond scoring their next bag of weed or scamming their way into a good party. As a put-upon janitor at a fancy gym, Jacobson plays the only slightly straighter man to Glazer's free-wheeling, highly sexual temp who's more likely to light up a bowl at her desk than answer the phones. Think Girls, except where Lena Dunham's Hannah and her friends show flashes of potential, Abbi and Ilana are unapologetically, tremendously awful—and hysterical. Actually, think It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia (in the early seasons, when it was truly inspired) but with some added grrl power. The funny gals swing by the Sinclair for a sure to be riotous night of stand-up at Broad City Live on Nov. 4. Meanwhile, on Oct. 4, the Berklee Performance Center welcomes another pair of delightfully irreverent weirdos: Tim and Eric. That would be Tim Heidecker and Eric Wareheim, the comedic team behind Adult Swim's mind-bendingly bizarre Tim and Eric Awesome Show, Great Job!, who'll bring their cult TV show's wacky array of song, dance and sketch oddities to the stage. Colored by a kind of dead-eyed earnestness that belies the genius beneath, their brand of out-there humor isn't for everyone, but the niche they fill is a strange and wonderful one. Bonus: They'll be joined by Adult Swim's Tim and Eric spinoff character Dr. Steve Brule, aka the inimitable John C. Reilly.

POETRY IN MOTION (AND IN BRONZE)

Edgar Allan Poe had famously mixed feelings about his hometown, having dissed Transcendentalist scribes as "Frogpondians" and—after a way-harsh review of his reading at the Boston Lyceum—declared that "Bostonians have no soul." But it's all good, Edgar; Boston loves you anyway. Case in point: the long-awaited Oct. 5 unveiling of Stefanie Rocknak's sculpture Poe Returning to Boston (pictured), part of the city's new Literary Cultural District (the first of its kind in the country) and accompanied by a program at the nearby Park Plaza Hotel featuring Rocknak, Pulitzer winner Megan Marshall and The Poe Shadow author Matthew Pearl, among others. But Poe isn't the only local literary luminary getting a tribute. The Lyric Stage Company is presenting the Boston premiere of Dear Elizabeth, Sarah Ruhl's play drawn from letters exchanged by Elizabeth Bishop and Robert Lowell, which offers a revealing look into their 35-year friendship. "We see these two artists who are going to become two of the greatest poets of the 20th century in their awkward phase," says director A. Nora Long. "Elizabeth writes this letter to Robert just before she wins the Pulitzer—'God, when do we start writing the real poems?' I think anyone who works in the arts, or anyone at all really, has this feeling sometimes as you meander through adulthood, like, when does my life really start?"

An epistolary play poses dramatic challenges, but Long relishes them. "It's not a traditional narrative, but what I think Sarah Ruhl has done really effectively is use the imagery of their words and poems to expand the play out of the bounds of their letters, infusing and interpreting based on what's happening in their lives," she says. "It's the imagination of the poets realized—if we do it right—so I think that's going to be compelling to watch."

FATAL ATTRACTIONS

Boston Lyric Opera and Boston Ballet are putting their spin on two classic love stories that don't exactly end with a happily ever after. Watch fate unfold on the 40th anniversary of composer Frank Martin's death as BLO presents the fully staged Boston premiere of The Love Potion, his retelling of the ill-starred romance of Tristan and Isolt, sung in a newly commissioned English translation. Isolt, played by BLO regular Chelsea Basler, gets caught in a love triangle when her groom-to-be's nephew enters the picture. This is one of the company's Opera Annex productions, which bring fully staged chamber operas to unexpected settings—in this case a synagogue. Meanwhile, Boston Ballet artistic director Mikko Nissinen has teamed up with designer Robert Perdziola for a second act following their 2012 revamping of The Nutcracker. This time, they're revisiting Swan Lake (pictured), with new sets, costumes and choreography. Tchaikovsky's score and Ivanov's famed second act remain the same, but Nissinen has expanded one aspect of the original story, Odette's abduction, into a prologue to add context. "When I started to choreograph and I was listening to the overture, it was there; I just had to follow the music," he says. "It almost felt like it belonged here always." Having danced many of the roles himself, Nissinen has felt right at home during the creation of this new production, which he hopes will prove to be a great tribute to the ballet. But as for the love birds, he says, "This time it's going to be [a] tragic ending."

ART FOR IPHONE ADDICTS

Attention obsessive Instagrammers: Your feed has nothing on Little Red Book 128, one of Andy Warhol's curated albums of Polaroids documenting his daily life, from mundane moments to celeb-packed parties. It's a recent gift to the deCordova Sculpture Park and Museum and a centerpiece of The Social Medium, a timely survey of social photography from the mid-20th century to the present. The exhibit includes many vintage street, celebrity, portrait and documentary photos that anticipate our own age of oversharing. "For decades, the impulse to capture our social activities in photographs has been strong; it is only today, when digital media has made it more instantaneous and pervasive, that we can look back and see this more clearly," explains curator Samantha Cataldo. "'Selfies' and 'photobombs' have existed for decades." More into winning Words With Friends than finding the perfect filter? Head to the Brattle Theatre for tips from Stephin Merritt. Turns out, when he isn't busy fronting the Magnetic Fields, the singer/songwriter is an avid player. (He even got his mom, a former English teacher, hooked on the game.) Hence his new book 101 Two-Letter Words, featuring an original four-line poem for each two-letter term sanctioned for Scrabble play, which should serve as handy mnemonic devices for your next match.

HURRAHS FOR HOLLYWOOD

"I never go outside unless I look like Joan Crawford the movie star. If you want to see the girl next door, go next door," the screen queen quipped. Such outsized style suffuses Hollywood Glamour: Fashion and Jewelry from the Silver Screen, a just-opened exhibit at the Museum of Fine Arts highlighting gowns and bling worn by Crawford, Greta Garbo, Marlene Dietrich and other '30s and '40s stars. Designed by the likes of Travis Banton, Elsa Schiaparelli and eight-time Oscar winner Edith Head, the fashions feature lush velvets, silks, satins and lamés in sexy silhouettes. (As co-curator Michelle Finamore notes, "It was almost impossible, especially with the sleek satins, to wear any type of undergarment.") Also on view are bold jewels by Trabert & Hoeffer-Mauboussin and Paul Flato ("They definitely give this aesthetic of more-is-more," says co-curator Emily Stoehrer), plus photos, costume sketches, Golden Age film clips featuring the designs and a custom pair of nine-inch platforms that helped the five-foot Mae West feel larger-than-life. Of course, showbiz isn't always so glamorous. Consider Candice Breitz's The Woods, an exhibit that spotlights child actors—and actors who play children—in the film hubs of Hollywood, Bollywood and Nollywood. Representing the Peabody Essex Museum's most ambitious art commission yet, it's composed of three video installations: The Audition, which has LA hopefuls performing monologues based on industry advice for kids; The Rehearsal, in which young Mumbai talents perform a script of quotes by Bollywood icon Shah Rukh Khan; and The Interview, featuring Chinedu Ikedieze and Osita Iheme, 30-something actors who are small in stature but two of Nigeria's biggest stars.

FAMOUS NAMES AND FAMILY DRAMAS

Intergenerational family conflicts fuel two of the season's most star-studded shows. First, ArtsEmerson hosts one of only two post-Broadway engagements of The Trip to Bountiful, headlined by Blair Underwood, Vanessa Williams and Cicely Tyson, reprising the role that won her Tony, Drama Desk and Outer Critics Circle awards. Featuring a predominantly black cast, this revival offers a fresh take on Horton Foote's much-loved drama, in which Tyson's elderly character clashes with her domineering daughter-in-law and runs off alone in hopes of returning to her Texas hometown. While Bountiful has been performed countless times since its 1953 debut, Eve Ensler's O.P.C.—a comic look at consumer culture, compromise and "obsessive political correctness"—will be making its world premiere at the American Repertory Theater. The Vagina Monologues playwright's latest work explores the tension between a liberal candidate for the U.S. Senate (Melissa Leo [pictured], an Oscar winner for The Fighter and Emmy winner for Louie) and her radical freegan daughter (Olivia Thirlby of Juno and Bored to Death), who fight over differences in politics, lifestyle and other topics you were told never to discuss at the dinner table.

ORCHESTRATIONS OLD AND NEW

It's a hist[illegible]n for fans of classical [illegible]ic, with [illegible] Handel and Haydn Society celebrating its bicentennial while 35-year-old Andris Nelsons (pictured) takes the helm of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as its youngest music director in more than a century. The setting for both occasions is Symphony Hall, and H+H artistic director Harry Christophers is hoping to "lift the roof off" the storied venue with the season-opening program Baroque Fireworks! The fireworks come in the form of pieces from Baroque greats such as Handel, Bach and Vivaldi, including the opening number, Handel's "Zadok the Priest," a Christophers favorite since it's played before European soccer games. Also included is "They play'd, in air the trembling music floats" by Sir John Stevenson, which was performed at the first H+H concert in 1815. "Bring on the next 200 years!" Christophers jokes. Meanwhile, at the BSO, the focus is on Nelsons' very first year wielding the baton. While his official debut on Sept. 27 is sold out, you can still get tickets for Nelsons' first world premiere as BSO director in November, when he'll be conducting a newly commissioned score from fellow Latvian Eriks Ešenvalds. Add in Yo-Yo Ma tugging the strings for Prokofiev's Symphony-Concerto, and this should be a memorable night for Nelsons in a season that's sure to be chock full of them.

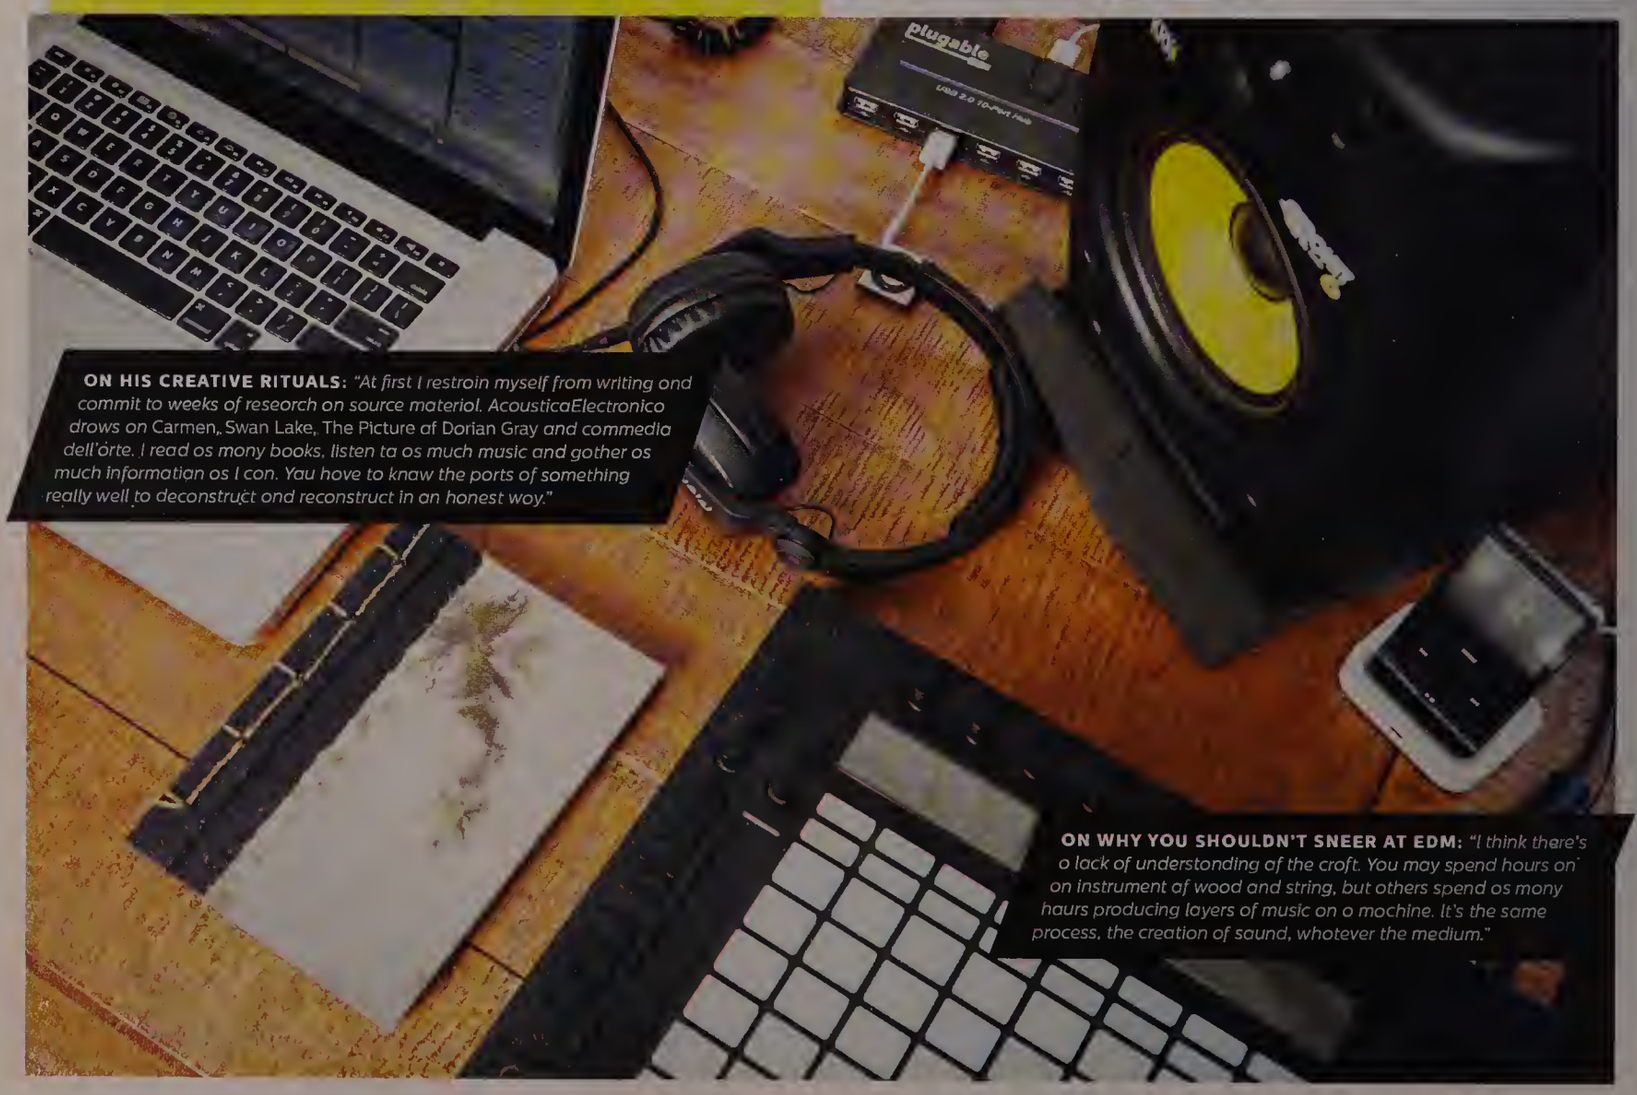
Works in Progress

FOUR ARTISTS SHARE THEIR FALL WORKS—AND THEIR EVER-EVOLVING CREATIVE PROCESS.

BY SCOTT KEARNAN



PHOTOGRAPHED BY CHELSEA KYLE

Surround Sound

There are only two kinds of music, says Colin Thurmond: Good and bad. So to compose his own work, he immerses himself in all styles, from the recordings of Ray Charles and Bach that first inspired him in childhood to modern electronic dance music. His South End studio's arsenal of tools includes his primary instrument, the guitar, in all its forms—acoustic, electric, flamenco and beyond—alongside a laptop and DJ decks for mixing thumping beats. And though Thurmond tours the world for classical engagements, produces commissions for professional orchestras and is pursuing a doctorate at New England Conservatory, he's as at home in the nightclub as he is at the symphony. As director of music for Touch Performance Art, a company in residency at the American Repertory Theater, Thurmond designs immersive experiences that synthesize music, sound and live showmanship. Its signature show, returning to Oberon this fall, is AcousticaElectronica, a fourth wall-shattering spectacle that is equal parts circus, rave and dubstep-remixed opera. Traditional? No. But it's all good.

ON WHEN INSPIRATION STRIKES: "On my own, I'm typically a morning person. I love getting things done first thing, when the sun is coming up and it's still very quiet. But with other artists, there's a special process that happens when you're burning the midnight oil."

ON HIS CREATIVE RITUALS: "At first I restrain myself from writing and commit to weeks of research on source material. AcousticaElectronica draws on Carmen, Swan Lake, The Picture of Dorian Gray and commedia dell'arte. I read as many books, listen to as much music and gather as much information as I can. You have to know the parts of something really well to deconstruct and reconstruct in an honest way."

ON WHY YOU SHOULDN'T SNEER AT EDM: "I think there's a lack of understanding of the craft. You may spend hours on an instrument of wood and string, but others spend as many hours producing layers of music on a machine. It's the same process, the creation of sound, whatever the medium."

ON THINKING OUTSIDE THE BOX: "There's a part of this world that is bored by proscenium-style shows, and that really wants to feel engaged and interactive. We have people who won't miss Urbanity shows like they won't miss a Red Sox game. People need to support the arts, but the arts need to keep up."

ON THE URBAN MUSE: "Because I grew up in such a rural place [Plainville, Kansas], when I saw a big city for the first time I was enamored. I had sparkly-eyes. There's magic to the city, to people living and moving in close quarters. There's chaos. Inspiration comes from being part of that."

ON THE FIRST STEPS TO CHOREOGRAPHY: "Last year I was watching a man move on the T, the way he was passing his foot without even noticing it, and how that motion created a symphony of other movement. I took pen to paper, started writing things down, I made a few little sketches and listened to certain songs. I talked to other dancers about it. The challenge is in not straying too far from the intention.

Dancing About Architecture

Frank Lloyd Wright said, "Space is the breath of art." With each turn, leap and exhalation, choreographer Betsi Graves agrees. She is entranced by cityscapes: the graceful reach of towering buildings, the geometric structure of the streets and the barely perceptible movements that happen on the subway as we everyday dancers move in and around the space of others in transit. Such observations inspired her to found Urbanity Dance, now Boston's second largest professional dance company, which is bringing contemporary work offstage and into the city: An October "Dance Crawl" will invite audiences to trail performers through a series of venues. Urbanity flirts with experimental territory, as in a November performance with "self-conducted orchestra" A Far Cry, a partly improvised piece in which Graves' dancers will anticipate and respond to the music. And this fall, the company will also be settling into a new home: a much larger South End studio with additional space for offices and community classes—and more room to breathe.

ON HER HOME STUDIO, A CATSKILLS BARN: "When you're a kid, you have these moments of pure joy and harmony. You find yourself alone marveling at light or simple things. Moving to the country, I've found that again. I feel more centered, more focused."

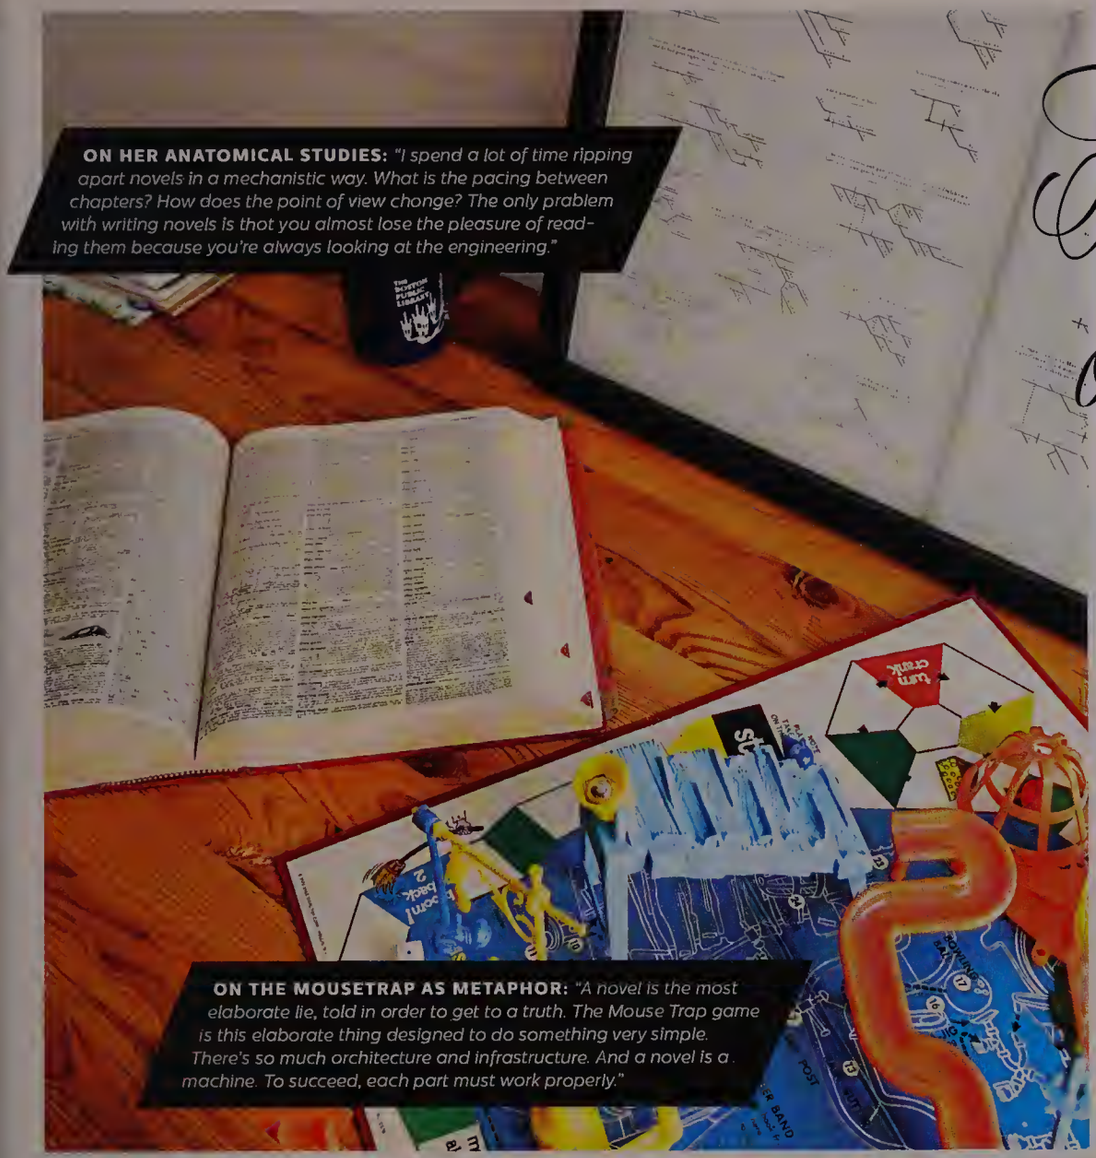
ON PLAYING MUSIC AND MOVIES WHILE SHE WORKS: "I go through phases. I'll go from rap music to opera, from '80s movies like Beat Street and Purple Rain to costume dramas like Sense and Sensibility and Marilyn Monroe films. Things that are so known that I don't have to pay attention to them."

Class Artist



This fall, Shinique Smith is having a homecoming. Sure, the internationally exhibited artist was raised in Maryland and is based in upstate New York. But she clocked classroom time in Boston, receiving her masters in teaching from Tufts University and the School of the Museum of Fine Arts. She even instructed at the Boston Arts Academy—ironic considering that Smith was, by her own admission, a sometimes dodgy young student. She was asked to leave the Baltimore School for the Arts after cutting class for two months, but she also got an artistic education from street corner punks and graffiti artist friends in the 1980s. Those influences are obvious in Shinique Smith: Bright Matter, her just-opened MFA exhibit of 30 colorful and calligraphic mixed-media paintings, found-object sculptures, videos and installations that celebrate the exuberance of youth and acknowledge its bittersweet passing. This month, she also unveils Seven Moon Junction, a massive mural in Dewey Square, presented in a partnership between the MFA and the Rose Kennedy Greenway Conservancy. Inspired by her 2013 painting Seven Moons, it will be on view for a year on one of Boston's biggest canvases.

ON HOW TEACHING IMPACTS HER CREATIVE PROCESS: "I can't be a hypocrite, so I apply my critiques to my own practice and work ethic. I also give and follow advice I learned from one of my own teachers: 'Give yourself permission to follow the inspiration, and remember you have to destroy in order to create.'"

The Spacing of Words

For author Jennifer Haigh, each day follows a familiar plot. She's an early riser and a tenacious worker, arriving at her Roslindale studio by 6 am and writing until the words run dry. She says she has a Pavlovian response to this space, its size, its smell; it triggers inspiration. However she works, it's working: News from Heaven, a recent collection of interconnected short stories, won her a 2014 Massachusetts Book Award and a 2014 PEN New England Award for fiction. And "Sublimation," a short story about aging, existential crises and gender nonconformity, is being distributed around town for the October Boston Book Festival's One City One Story initiative. Now she's working on her fifth novel and finding inspiration in an unlikely place: a vintage Mouse Trap board game. Haigh says it reminds her of constructing a novel, an act that requires every element to be in its perfect place.

ON HER ANATOMICAL STUDIES: "I spend a lot of time ripping apart novels in a mechanistic way. What is the pacing between chapters? How does the point of view chonge? The only problem with writing novels is thot you almost lose the pleasure of reading them because you're always looking at the engineering."

ON THE MOUSETRAP AS METAPHOR: "A novel is the most elaborate lie, told in order to get to a truth. The Mouse Trap game is this elaborate thing designed to do something very simple. There's so much orchitecture and infrastructure. And a novel is a machine. To succeed, each part must work properly."

ON REWRITING: "I don't like writing; I like rewriting. Revisions are the only part I enjoy. The first draft is pure misery. It' poinful and em barrassing to be confronted with the mediocrity of what you're producing. Once the first draft is satisfactory, I can relax and enjoy the process."

ON WRITING SHORT AND LONG: "Writing o short story is like dating. A novel is like a long, bod marriage. But I'm monogomous in thot marriage. When I'm writing a novel I can't even look at another. I'll do nothing else but write this damn novel, every day, until it's aver."

METRO BOSTON'S TASTY GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND SCANDINAVIAN SUPPING

AGENDA for 9/17–9/30

Eat like a Northern European.

HUNGRY FOR SOME KJØTTKAKER? Fancy a hearty bowl of ärtsoppa? It's likely you can sample both at Smörgåsbord, a Nordic food festival hosted by the Scandinavian Cultural Center. The first of its kind in the Boston area, the fest will focus on "new Nordic" fare, a movement that, despite its name, eschews newfangled culinary techniques in favor of a return to traditional methods, including smoking, pickling and curing. New Nordic cuisine also places a strong emphasis on seasonal ingredients native to the region where they're prepared, which should be evident in the dishes presented by the four local toques serving up takes on Nordic eats from their respective tasting stations. The participating chefs include the Cottage's Peter Hansen and Kitchensurfing chefs Jitti Chaithiraphant, Tim Fahy and Mark Hardin, along with Finnish chef and author Sami Tallberg, who will give a lecture on foraging. The fest will also feature a Norwegian salmon cooking duel, a tasting station just for kids (though some adults will likely try to sneak a Swedish sausage or two) and local Nordic food and craft vendors. We're hungry already. / Alexandra Cavallo

SMÖRGÅSBORD starts at 11 am on Sept. 20 at the Scandinavian Cultural Center, 206 Waltham St., Newton. $20. scandicenter.org.

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

SECRET SELVES The lives of the people in the home behind a white picket fence aren't always as perfect as they appear. Such is the case of the couple in Far From Heaven, a musical adaptation of the acclaimed 2002 film of the same name. Set in 1950s Connecticut, the drama follows Claire, a happily married housewife whose life is picture perfect—until she discovers her husband, Frank, is harboring a secret. When she catches him with another man, she finds her carefully constructed life unraveling, eventually beginning her own illicit union with a black man. Exploring the complex nature of relationships, societal taboos and deep-seated desires, the SpeakEasy Stage Company production tackles social issues that still resonate today. It runs through Oct. 11 at the BCA. / Alexandra Cavallo

THAT SINKING FEELING Papier-mâché and suicide? You won't find that on Pinterest (we hope!), but the two meet in Rocks in my Pockets. Composed of five fantasy-infused stories, the autobiographical film uses papier-mâché stop-motion and classic hand-drawn animation to explore mental health issues among the women in director Signe Baumane's family, tracing their troubles back to 1920s Latvia, where her grandmother attempted to drown herself but forgot the crucial step of weighing herself down. Watch this heartbreaking yet comical piece play out Sept. 24-Oct. 2 at the Museum of Fine Arts, where a Q&A with the director will follow the premiere screening. / Grace Rasmus

Reviews by Brett Michel

Begin Again ★★★ This film's original title, Can a Song Save Your Life?, was probably a little too on-the-nose—even for a narrative as sincere, heartfelt and corny as Once writer/director John Carney's latest music-driven confection. So Begin Again he did with a new name for this New York-set charmer, which got lost in the shuffle when it premiered at last September's Toronto Film Festival. It took a while to arrive in multiplexes, but saving this small-scale toe-tapper for summer is a canny bit of counterprogramming. After all, while it shares some of the same shaggy-dog pleasures as Carney's 2006 crowd-pleaser, nothing blows up, no one gets shot and the only hero to show up on screen is Dan Mulligan, a fallen record-label co-founder. Sure, he's played by Mark Ruffalo—the Incredible Hulk himself—but Dan's the only one in need of saving. That is, until he drunkenly stumbles into an East Village club and hears lovelorn songwriter Greta (Keira Knightley, who can sing!) and recognizes the potential for mutual salvation—and Carney scores a hit once again. (In the suburbs.)

Boyhood ★★★1/2 With his landmark trilogy—1995's Before Sunrise, 2004's Before Sunset and last year's Before Midnight—writer/director Richard Linklater has spent 18 years tracking the lives of two lovers (Julie Delpy and Ethan Hawke), checking in with them at nine-year intervals. With his latest extended-storytelling experiment, an epic chronicle of childhood's mundane moments filmed over 12 years, Linklater finds the poetry in growing up. When we meet Mason Evans Jr. (played by newcomer Ellar Coltrane from ages 6 to 18), he's a cute little moppet going about everyday kid stuff. But Linklater's not interested in an idyllic Norman Rockwell portrait. Mason's part of a fractured family, held together by his mom (Patricia Arquette, never better). Humorous signifiers act as time capsules, buried throughout the film to clue us into the year of the action. Some of these signposts are quite literal: By the end of W's second term, Mason Sr. (Hawke) has his son planting Obama signs on neighborhood lawns—while uprooting McCain posters. It's just one of life's little moments that makes this 2 hour and 46 minute film move so effortlessly fast. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Calvary ★★★★ "I first tasted semen when I was 7 years old." Thus is the first of many memorable lines in writer/director John Michael McDonagh's moving, darkly comic sophomore film—one spoken in a brogue by an unseen man sitting opposite Father James Lavelle (the great Brendan Gleeson) inside the confessional of a sleepy Irish fishing village. "It's certainly a startling opening line," responds the priest, before this lost sheep continues his tale of being raped by a member of the clergy—and shares his intention to exact murderous revenge in a week's time upon the innocent Lavelle, a man incapable of horrors that became far too commonplace. And so, a dead man walks, still tending to his flock, his trials mounting by the day. It's a classic American Western scenario, with the massive rocky outgrowths and damp green fields of Easkey, Ireland, standing in for the dust of Monument Valley. One might willfully misread the movie's title, but alas, there's no cavalry on the way; Lavelle stands alone. Like Gary Cooper's Marshal Kane in High Noon, he marches stoically toward his would-be killer, armed with nothing but his faith. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Chef ★★★ This isn't a movie about Jon Favreau. Sure, he wrote, directed and starred in this comedy about a once-hot gourmet chef, Carl Casper, who's in a creative rut. After being called out by his critics, Casper begins serving up delectable Cuban sandwiches from a food truck, winning back favor from customers and critics alike by returning to his roots. Favreau's a filmmaker who impressed with the hit indies Swingers and Made, and then a couple of massive Iron Man movies, before making the joyless critical and commercial failure Cowboys & Aliens. But Chef is a small picture, a tasty concoction in which his simmering acting chops are brought to a boil by 10-year-old Emjay Anthony, who delightfully underplays Casper's son, Percy, as the two bond over the heat of the truck's grill on a cross-country trip. Is Favreau as thin-skinned as Casper, who gets into a very public social media spat with one of his earliest supporters? Who cares, when such big talents as Dustin Hoffman, John Leguizamo, Sofia Vergara, Oliver Platt, Scarlett Johansson and Robert Downey Jr. are along for the ride? (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Disappearance of Eleanor Rigby: Them ★★1/2 There's a lot to like in this film from newcomer Ned Benson, a portrait of a marriage fractured by a tragedy that's only gradually revealed, never wholly coming into focus. Jessica Chastain is Eleanor Rigby, and when first we see her and her husband, Conor Ludlow (James McAvoy), they're skipping out on a dinner bill, fleeing into the streets of Manhattan—rather unforgivable, once we find out that Conor owns his own restaurant. Still, this doesn't explain why Eleanor attempts to take her own life in the next scene. But then, there are many questions about this pair that remain unanswered, which can probably be explained by the fact that Benson's movie used to live as two separate pictures, subtitled Him and Her. The reconfigured Them is a paired-down compromise that frustrates; the companion films premiered in Toronto a year ago to much acclaim, but this edit gives the impression that too much was left on the cutting room floor. And yet, a handful of scenes etch in the memory, like a tender monologue delivered by Eleanor's father (William Hurt). Alas, more attention should have been focused on us. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

2012 Best Foreign Language Film nominee, opens with an image of the underside of the Brooklyn Bridge reflected in a dirty puddle. This shot encapsulates a lot of the messy goings-on in the screenplay from local author Dennis Lehane, based on his short story "Animal Rescue." The small world of quiet bartender Bob Saginowski (Tom Hardy), who works for his cousin Marv (James Gandolfini), is about to be turned upside-down. Their small pub, a front for a scheme of money drops that funnel cash to the Chechen mobsters who control the bar, is robbed by a couple of clueless thugs, setting in motion events that will expose neighborhood secrets going back a decade. Lehane's plot is secondary, but this is a terrific character study featuring fine work from Swedish actress Noomi Rapace, imposing Belgian Matthias Schoenaerts (star of Bullhead), the late Gandolfini and especially Hardy, a Brit who brings a touch of Terry Malloy and Marty Piletti to his lovesick loner, a man who shares many traits with his pit bull, a scruffy pup he's pulled from the garbage. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

THE GIVER ★1/2 All of the recent film adaptations of dystopian young-adult novels influenced by Cambridge-based author Lois Lowry's 1994 Newbery Medal-winning book only serve to make producer/star Jeff Bridges' long-gestating passion project feel like an also-ran. Set in a colorless Community of perfectly content people who fear nothing—not war, not pain and especially not pleasure—Lowry's tome focuses on the interactions between the Giver and Jonas, a 12-year-old who has been carefully selected as his Community's rare "Receiver of Memory." But movie audiences for the Twilight and Hunger Games adaptations skew a little older, which explains the decision to advance the age of Jonas (25-year-old Australian hunk Brenton Thwaites) to 16. Also older are his friends Asher (Cameron Monaghan) and Fiona (Odeya Rush), whose expanded roles in Aussie director Phillip Noyce's film facilitate both a love interest and action scenes: After Jonas socks him in the face, Asher hunts his pal with an airborne drone. Who needs to be faithful to the novel? Bridges, for one. His solemn role as the Giver is one of the few things worth praising in the picture, which otherwise has little to give. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

GUARDIANS OF THE GALAXY ★★ Risking the rage of fanboys everywhere, I find myself oddly detached from James Gunn's adaptation of this atypical Marvel Comics property. In the past, we've had Robert Downey Jr. to make his iron suit shine, and, by golly, that Chris Evans sure is keen as America's oldest Boy Scout—but they exist here, on planet Earth. Charming though Chris Pratt is in his first starring role, he's stuck in a space opera that will sell a lot of toys (and comic books) but test those with low tolerance for characters named Drax, Gamora, Groot or... Yondu Udonta? Pratt plays Peter Quill, or "Star-Lord," a case of arrested development—but then, he was abducted by aliens before hitting puberty. Twenty-six years later, he leads a band of intergalactic misfits as massive chunks of exposition hurtle past us. (Let's see, after they visit the planets Morag, Xander and Nova Prime, they'll travel to Nowhere, aka "the severed head of an ancient celestial being.") Despite genuinely funny performances from Pratt and Bradley Cooper (voicing a wisecracking, gun-toting raccoon), the film wears thin before succumbing to third-act Marvel bloat. Watch it make a fortune. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

THE HUNDRED-FOOT JOURNEY ★★1/2 Bringing novelist Richard C. Morais' best-seller to the big screen, director Lasse Hallström employs the same unsubtle touch that made 2000's Chocolat, his sultry romantic drama set in a small French village, such a hit. No doubt, that's exactly what producers Steven Spielberg and Oprah Winfrey wanted for the tale of Hassan Kadam (Manish Dayal), a handsome culinary magician who flees London ("British vegetables have no soul," you see) with his siblings and their Papa (Om Puri) after they've already been displaced from their native India. The family settles in—yes—a small French village after a vehicular mishap nearly kills them. "Maybe brakes break for a reason," announces the elder Kadam, rationalizing his intention to open an Indian restaurant 100 feet from the elegant Michelin-starred restaurant lorded over by Madame Mallory (Helen Mirren, who won't win another Oscar for her French accent). Hassan's talents eventually broker a truce to the war between the eateries, but a third-act detour to Paris nearly kills the film—until Dayal's star turn charms the picture back to life during the conclusion's return to the south of France. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

INTO THE STORM ★ Second only to February, August is when movie studios send lame films out to movie theater pasture to be shot—or at least when they get suckers to part with their hard-earned cash. Take Step Up All In, which is apparently so bad that it didn't screen for press. Then there's this third-rate knockoff of second-rate 1996 blockbuster Twister, a storm-chasing thriller that at least featured a first-rate character actor, the late, great Philip Seymour Hoffman, who helped ground sights like tornado-swept cows. To be fair, director Steven Quale's film does star Matt Walsh, who has 105 acting credits, so it's not like he hasn't paid his dues; you'll recognize his face, if not his name. And yet, he's stuck in the umpteenth movie in recent memory that relies on the tired "found footage" gimmick that always leaves me wondering, "Who found this?" when I should really be asking, "Why am I watching this?" Oh, right—so you don't have to. Need more warning? This schlock is penned by John Swetnam, the same talent who wrote...Step Up All In. (In the suburbs.)

LA JALOUSIE (Jealousy) ★★★1/2 Glimpsed earlier this summer at the MFA's annual French Film Festival, where it confounded a packed house, Philippe Garrel's latest film returns for its regular engagement, along with a note from its distributor threatening that "Jealousy may be Garrel's most accessible film in nearly 50 years of filmmaking." Don't fret, fans of the post-New Wave master: The 66-year-old is still at his elliptical, oblique best here, as his son, surrogate and frequent star Louis once again steps in front of the camera. The beautiful black-and-white widescreen images were captured on 35mm by ace cinematographer Willy Kurant, who's shot landmark films like Jean-Luc Godard's Masculin Féminin, Chris Marker's Grin Without a Cat and a movie before its time, Louis C.K.'s Pootie Tang. All right, so if you're a fan of this last one, Garrel's picture might be a little too "French" for you, even if Mr. C.K. might empathize with the sexagenarian's subjects: an aging group of struggling artists, including the younger Garrel, an actor who leaves his wife (Rebecca Convenant) and daughter (Olga Milshtein), running off to live with his unemployed actress girlfriend (Anna Mouglalis). Things only get worse from here. Oui, s'il vous plaît! (At the Museum of Fine Arts.)

LAND HO! ★★★1/2 Martha Stephens wrote and directed the features Passenger Pigeons and Pilgrim Song, which you likely haven't heard of. Nevertheless, without those films under her belt, she wouldn't have discovered Southern spitfire Earl Lynn Nelson,

a newcomer to the acting game who starred in both. Through some miracle (likely the hand of executive producer David Gordon Green), Stephens has been partnered with Aaron Katz, the talented writer/director behind little-seen indies Quiet City, Cold Weather and Dance Party, USA. It's a great mix. The two share writing and directing credits on this crowd-pleaser about a pair of 60-something brother-in-laws—one widowed, one divorced—who rekindle their bond during a picturesque trip to Iceland. "Ex-brother-in-laws," corrects Colin (Australian Paul Eenhoorn, star of This Is Martin Bonner), after Mitch (Nelson) apologizes for "tricking" him into the trip. "That's a pretty lousy thing to do," Colin deadpans. "Driving through the country, staying at nice hotels, eating good food." Our odd couple also spend an evening clubbing with two young "tight-assed women," which is a compliment coming from Mitch, who's fond of calling people "turd." Delightful. (At West Newton.)

Love Is Strange ★★★1/2 In this compassionate portrait of the hardships faced by a couple finally married after nearly four decades together, John Lithgow and Alfred Molina bring real tenderness to their roles as Ben and George, a septuagenarian painter and a slightly younger music teacher at a Manhattan Catholic school. Rapidly, the two discover the meaning of "for better or worse." George is fired as a result of their union, forcing the two to sell the apartment they've shared for almost 20 years. Worse, they must live apart until they can find an affordable home. George moves in with a couple of NYPD officers (Manny Perez and Cheyenne Jackson) who live in their tenement, while Ben is taken in by his nephew (Darren Burrows) and his wife (Marisa Tomei), sharing a bunk bed with their territorial teenage son (Charlie Tahan). Separation takes its toll on the couple, and Lithgow is particularly fine as he quietly communicates his creeping realization that he's become a burden. Never dipping wholly into melodrama, this heartbreaker from director Ira Sachs casts its spell gradually, like the delicate Chopin that serves as the soundtrack. Lovely. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

The November Man ★1/2 "You feel the need for a relationship?" ex-CIA agent Peter Devereaux (Pierce Brosnan) asks his former protege, David Mason (Luke Bracey), before telling him to "get a dog" in this international espionage picture from Roger Donaldson (Brosnan's Dante's Peak director). Likewise, if you feel the need to see Brosnan go through the run-and-gun motions of the spy game, watch him in one of his James Bond films. Apparently, Brosnan misses his iconic role enough to have executive produced this cut-rate thriller that casts former Bond girl Olga Kurylenko (Quantum of Solace) as Alice Fournier, the woman the licensed killer has made it his mission to save. He protects her from the trigger-happy patriot Mason, who's unknowingly taking orders from a corrupt senior official within the agency who's protecting Arkady Federov (Lazar Ristovski), Russia's president-elect. This second-rate spook is a long way from an Ian Fleming character. And this picture, based on Bill Granger's novel There Are No Spies from the "November Man" series, leaves you neither shaken nor stirred. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sin City: A Dame to Kill For ★1/2 The stylish Sin City was a movie I would have loved had I been 15. Alas, as an adult, the juvenile sensibilities that Robert Rodriguez brought to the 2005 screen adaptation of the graphic novel by Frank Miller (who co-directed) addcd up to black-and-white overkill. Nine years on, what nevertheless felt fresh now feels stale in cinemas overstuffed with BANG! and POW! The original's

Clive Owen was smart to pass on this sequel (his character, Dwight, was recast with Josh Brolin, a strong actor who's altogether wrong for this role). But Bruce Willis, whose character, Hartigan, died in the first outing, does return; it's as if he's wandered in from The Sixth Sense. Mickey Rourke's Marv lacks the pathos that made his character the best thing in the original, while Miller's mix of old and new stories simply feels like leftovers in his and Rodriguez's late return to a barren well. Still, my 15-year-old self would have loved Eva Green, who almost makes this worth seeing. Almost. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Trip to Italy ★★★ A few years back, prolific filmmaker Michael Winterbottom unleashed a culinary, comic treat with The Trip, a largely improvised travelogue featuring comedians Steve Coogan and Rob Brydon (as a pair of friends named, conveniently, Steve Coogan and Rob Brydon) touring around northern England, sampling the region's restaurants on a magazine assignment. It wasn't really about much more than that, but listening to this duo riff off each other as semi-fictionalized versions of themselves sure was funny. They haven't lost any of their comic edge as they return for seconds, traveling from Piedmont to the Amalfi Coast to Capri in a convertible Mini Cooper, retracing the steps of the Romantic poets. It's doubtful that Byron and Shelley engaged in dueling impersonations of 19th-century actors, but hearing the Alan Partridge star (Coogan) and the talented Welsh mimic (Brydon) return to the vocal stylings of Michael Caine, as well as volley back-and-forth with the voices of various James Bonds, Batman, his nemesis Bane, and the different decibels of Al Pacino is side-splitting. (At Kendall Square.)

LABOR OF LOVELESS

Lydia Loveless scrapped an entire record's worth of "boring country songs" before getting to work on her latest album, Somewhere Else. Fans are doubtless glad she did, because the fearless mix of country, punk and nakedly unabashed lyricism has the 23-year-old poised to become a major star. Loveless' latest songs have taken a sexy turn from her Bloodshot Records debut, Indestructible Machine, as evident in "Head," a raunchy plea with a killer guitar solo, and "Really Wanna See You," a song of drug-fueled longing for a married ex. Come Sept. 26, you won't want to be anywhere else but upstairs at the Middle East. / Grace Rasmus

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

INSIDE JOBS Quittin' time is the best part of many people's work days. It's a sentiment brothers Auguste and Louis Lumière captured when they filmed workers leaving a factory in Lyon, France, in 1895. Their movie, the world's first motion picture, prompted Antje Ehmann and Harun Farocki to ask emerging filmmakers and art students to explore what work looks like around the world today. During the course of three years, the project hit 15 cities and generated more than 400 films of people at work (and clocking out), from ticket scalpers at Fenway Park to carpenters in Mexico City. On Sept. 19, the resulting exhibit Labor in a Single Shot opens at the Mills Gallery at the Boston Center for the Arts, and it's business as usual through Nov. 30. / Sarah Hagman

BRAIN FOOD

In Colin Adams' Zombies & Calculus, it takes professor Craig Williams a moment to realize that the student staggering into class late is not just sleep-deprived, but undead. (Tip: College kids tend to prefer Starbucks to brains.) Soon, it's clear this reanimated corpse is one of many threatening the campus, but Williams and his students have a weapon to fend off the hordes: math. Offering cheeky lessons on differential equations and exponential growth (which the survivors use to calculate the virus' spread), this is far from your average textbook. Arm yourself with a calculator and head to the Harvard Coop for a refresher course on Sept. 24. / Kim Lester

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Strect, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of t he three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

TROPICAL THUNDER

Zip-lining over the rainforest canopy

WHETHER YOU WANT TO SACRIFICE virgins, toast marshmallows or simply gawk at dramatic scenery, nothing beats vacationing in the shadow of an active volcano, and the Arenal region of Costa Rica is reason enough to risk getting flambéed à la Pompeii...especially when your hotel was rated the No. 1 resort in Central and South America by Travel + Leisure.

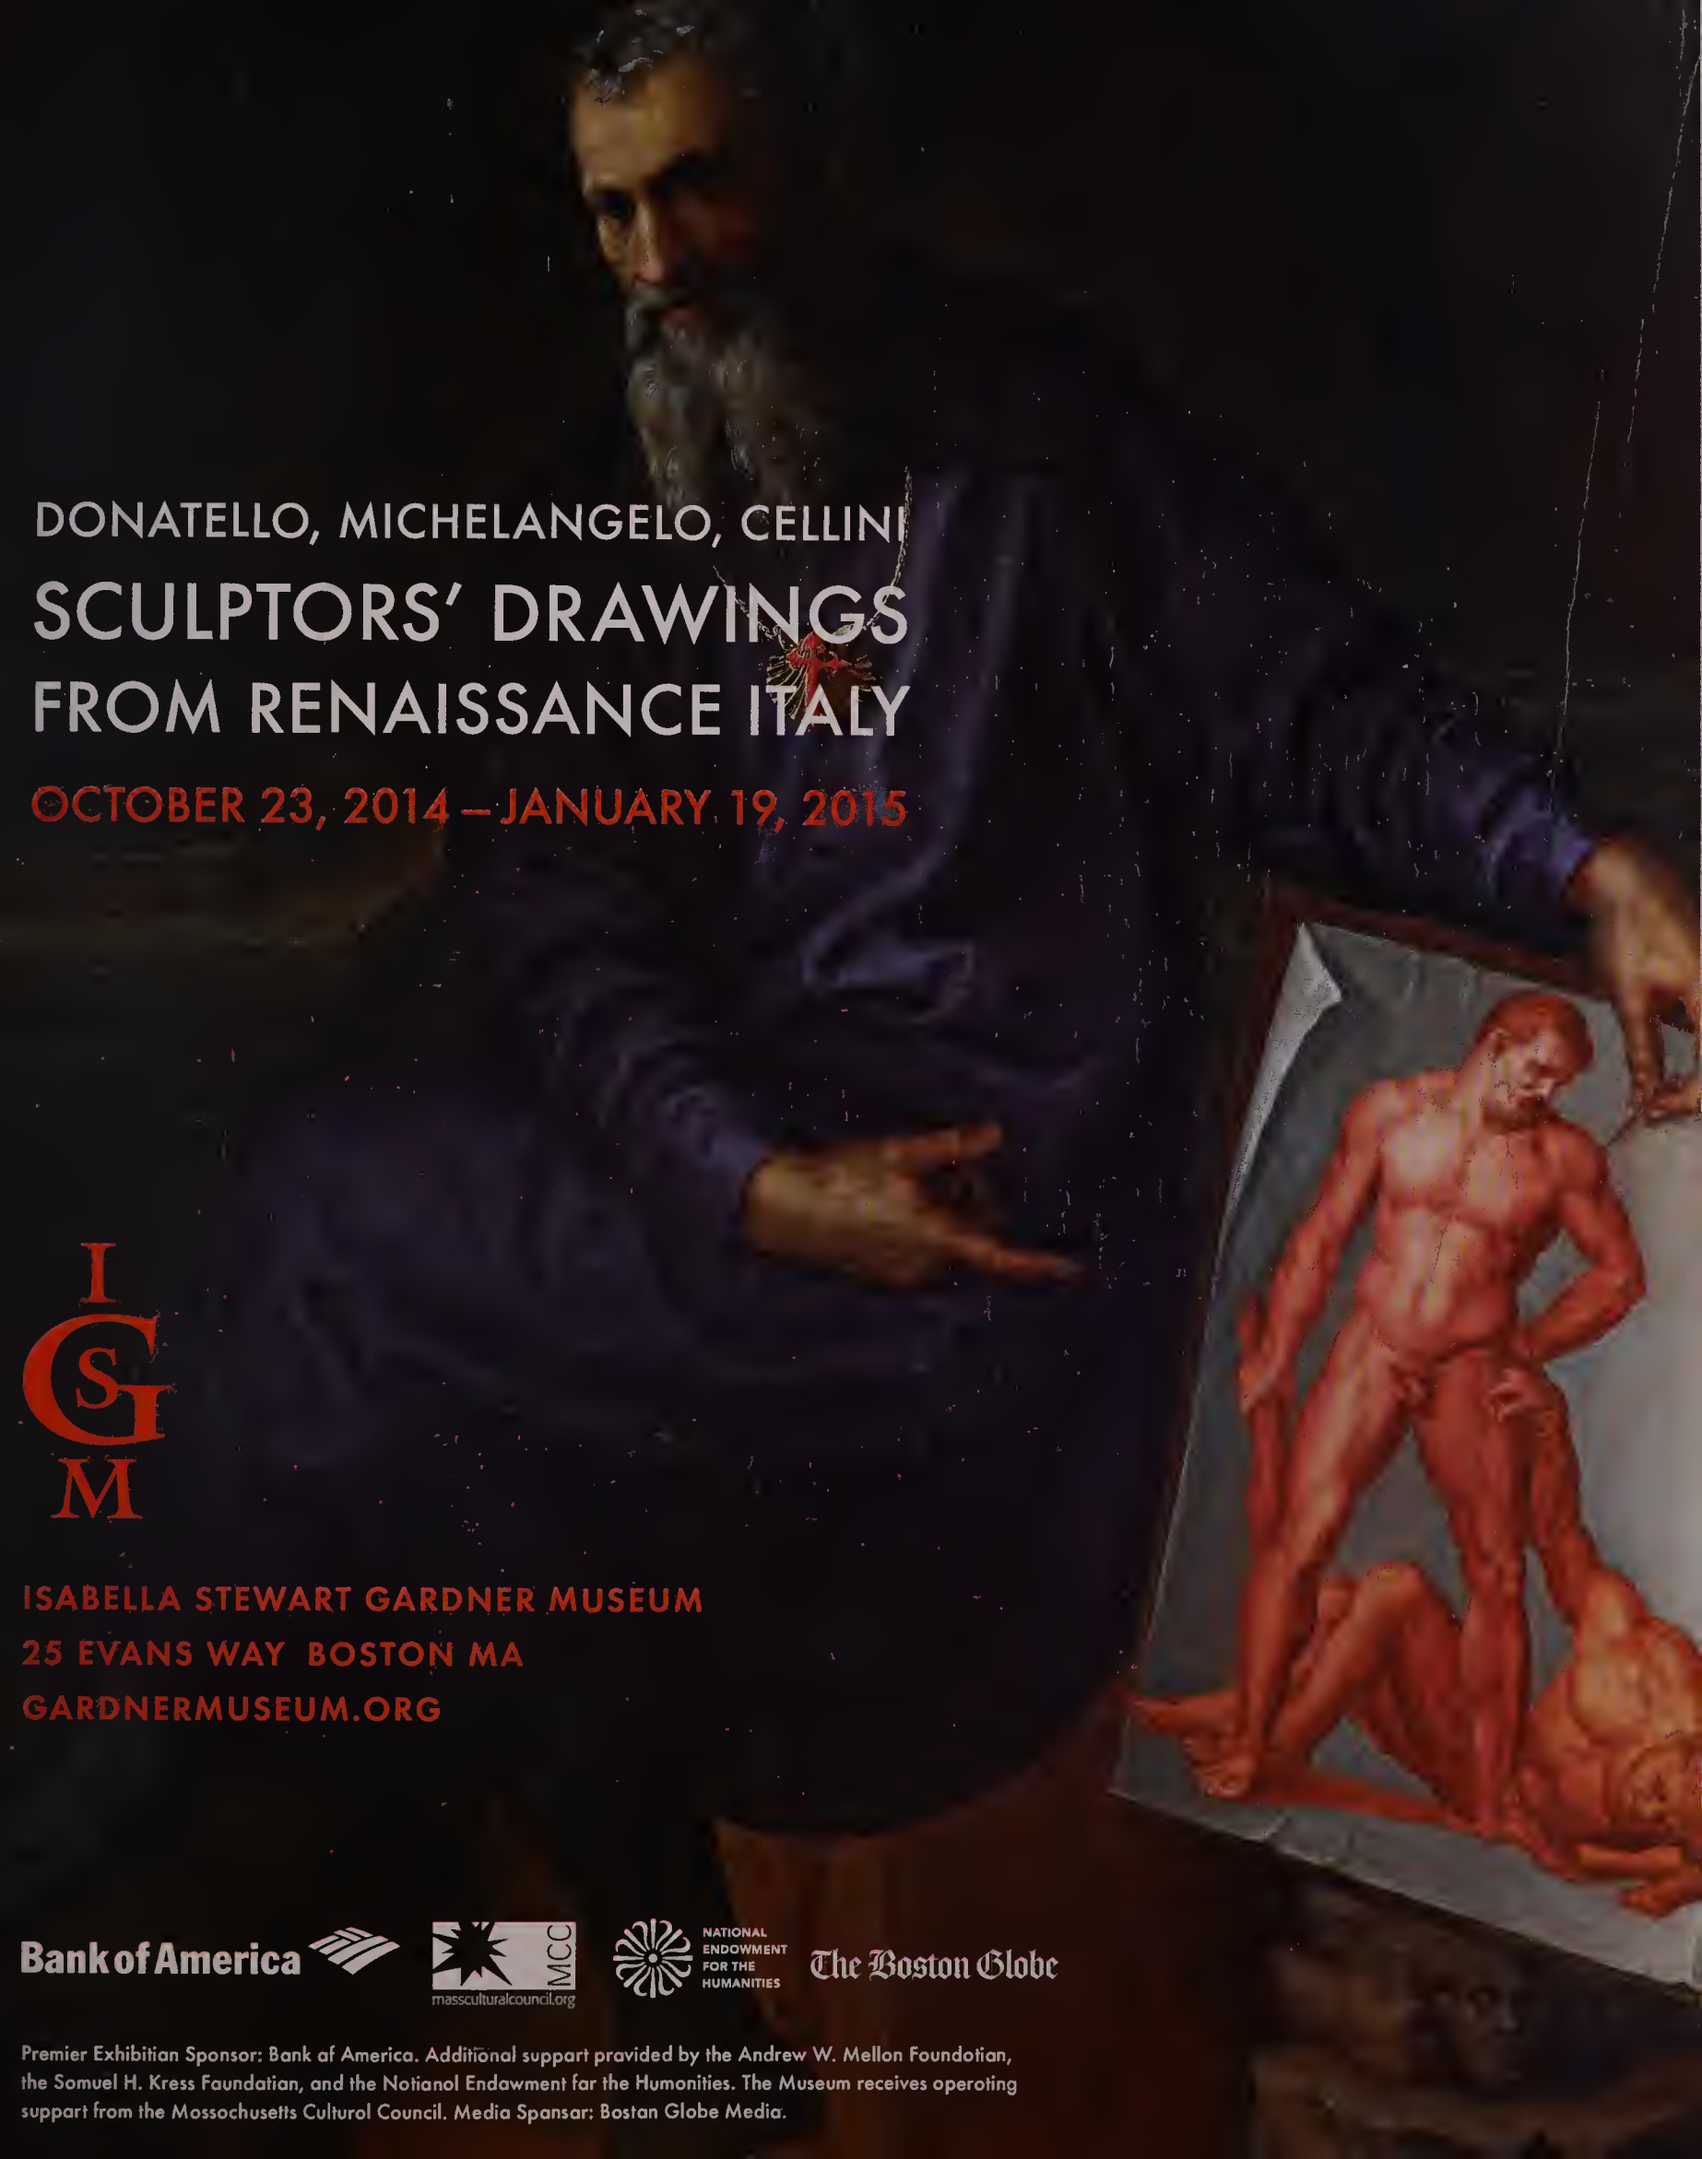
Like most places worth seeing, it's not terribly easy to get to. The flight to San José is painless enough, but then there's a three-hour drive along a highway with the hairiest of hairpin turns. The scenery is worth it, though. En route, our driver stopped to let a family of coatis cross the road and then pulled over to show us a sloth hanging upside down, apparently unconcerned, munching on a branch above the highway. Equally surprising were the signs in Hebrew for a kosher resort in the heart of the jungle, making me wonder if destination bar mitzvahs are the next big thing.

Like a five-star Siamese twin, the Nayara Springs Hotel and Spa is connected—via a 250-foot bridge spanning a deep gorge high above the tree canopy—to its sister property, the Nayara Hotel and Gardens. The entire place is superlative, but Nayara Springs is adults-only, which makes it uniquely suited to newlyweds, people carrying on torrid affairs and couples seeking some quality sexy-time. Each villa boasts a bathroom big enough to land a plane in, with indoor and outdoor showers fit for a Roman emperor, giant four-poster beds draped in mosquito netting and a deck hemmed in by orchids, birds of paradise and heliconia, with a daybed, a hammock and a plunge pool fed by natural mineral hot springs. And then there's the view of the volcano.

The temptation to lock the door and order room service until check-out was strong, and it probably would have taken a crowbar to pry us loose were it not for the many amusements awaiting us. We rode horses like we stole them to the foot of Arenal Volcano and hiked down a well-tended but precipitous path to the base of a waterfall that plunged 200 feet into pools so pure you could sell the water for 10 bucks a bottle. On the heart-attack-inducing end of the spectrum was zip-lining nearly 700 feet above anything remotely resembling the earth, although terror quickly gave way to adrenaline as I flew through the treetops like a crazed ape. (For what it's worth, Costa Ricans claim to have invented zip-lining.)

On the mellower side, there was yoga every morning in a beautifully carved wooden pavilion looking out into the jungle, plus a spa where the greatest disruption to a flawless Swedish massage was the racket of a toucan—that unlikeliest of birds—clacking its beak back and forth, or the distant screech of a howler monkey. We spent one lazy morning in the sybaritic swimming pools of Eco Termales Fortuna, where the bartender performed the unprecedented feat of making a piña colada that was not only drinkable but delicious.

It's not called a rainforest for nuthin', and at night the drumming on the roof lulled us to sleep, while the continuously low cloud cover had us wondering, as we floated in our hot tub, whether all the rumbling we heard was thunder or the preamble to a pyroclastic surge. (I've wanted to use that term since studying Krakatoa in the sixth grade.)



We gorged on everything from enchiladas to sushi, and every meal was superb; not surprisingly, Nayara boasts the top-rated restaurants in the region. At breakfast, the hotel's mascot, Carlotta—a brilliantly colored but belligerent macaw—would fly over and give us the stink-eye until we fended her off with a napkin.

Costa Rica is often referred to as the Switzerland of Central America, because it's had no standing military since 1948. That may or may not explain why the people are so uniformly pleasant. The national refrain is "pura vida" (pure life), which they use to mean...well, pretty much everything. In so many places, tourists are merely tolerated for the contents of their wallets. Costa Ricans seem genuinely jazzed about showing off their country, and their pride is well justified.

As he stamped my passport on the way out, the immigration official asked if I'd be returning.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

I HAD A BIG BIRTHDAY RECENTLY, AND MY husband surprised me with the most memorable meal of my life: a 10-course tasting at a chef's table. I don't mean seats overlooking the kitchen; I mean a single two-top in the middle of the action, with a fan perched nearby to offset the ovens' heat. The food was exquisite, the wine pairings sublime, but what really made the experience was chatting with the cooks, cheesemonger and sommelier and watching the whole intricate ballet behind the scenes, down to the scrupulous scrubbing of each station that stretched through the final courses, erasing all traces of the incredible meals and intense labors of that dinner service so the process could begin again the next day.

Here at The Improper, we like to give you peeks inside the kitchen too. In our lead feature, the staff takes a closer look at top pizzas in town, from the ovens that cook them to the elaborate certification processes some chefs are undergoing to perfect their pies. Elsewhere, Andrew Rimas digs into desserts from some talented pastry chefs, like Harvest's Brian Mercury, who wears his love for his craft on his sleeve (or rather, his wrist, home to a tattoo that traces out the word BAKE). MC Slim JB reviews the almost-too-pretty-to-eat plates at Liquid Art House, and Carolyn Faye Fox surveys some new cookbooks by local toques. Meanwhile, Alexandra Cavallo rounds up apple-based bevvies to suit different drinkers' palates, Tom Kielty catches up with Cuisine en Locale in their new HQ, and I check in with some chefs preparing to open new restaurants, who each offer a taste of what's to come this fall. Even John D. Spooner gets in on the action, dishing on dinner party etiquette in his latest advice column. Here's hoping our Fall Dining issue gives you plenty to chew on.

APPLE-BASED TIPPLES FOR YOUR HOME BAR »

Core Curriculum

As any BU undergrad will be happy to tell you, we are now fully entrenched in what the annals of history will surely record as #PumpkinSpice season. However, we're more partial to pumpkin's humbler autumnal brethren, the apple, a more complex and versatile fruit than it appears, as this boozy taxonomy suggests. Leave the pumpkin beer to the coeds and take a bite out of these offerings from local cideries, distilleries, breweries and wineries. / Alexandra Cavallo

CIDER Cider Creek's Hard Cider ($15)
Made from fermented apple juice, cider has been a popular American tipple since pre-Revolutionary times. Nowadays, it makes up one percent of the beer market, but it's a fast-growing category, with hundreds of varieties and many new players entering the field—like this recently launched hard cider from a Boston couple who funded their family venture through Kickstarter. Produced at a small New York cider press and then shipped directly to their Boston facility, Cider Creek's two offerings—an original Farmhouse Cider and a Saison Reserve—are made from a blend of five to seven varieties of hand-inspected apples and clock in at 6 9 percent ABV.

Where to buy it? Blonchord's, 103 Horvard Ave., Boston; Americon Provisions, 613 East Broadwoy, Boston

BRANDY Nashoba Valley Winery's Oak-Aged Apple Brandy ($24)
Looking for something sweet with a touch of heat? As the name suggests, Nashoba's brandy is aged in oak casks and offers warm yet crisp citrus, floral and herbal notes. Fill up a flask and sip this spirit around a late-autumn campfire or for liquid courage on a haunted hayride. Brandy not your spirit of choice? Nashoba also triple-distills its own vodka, made from its farm-grown apples.

Where to buy it? Nashoba Volley Winery, 100 Wottoquodock Hill Road, Bolton

BEER Night Shift Brewing's Fallen Apple ($13)
This seasonal golden ale from Everett's Night Shift is brewed from fresh Massachusetts apple cider and aged in rum and brandy barrels. Warmly spiced with nutmeg, coriander and cinnamon, a cider facsimile it's not—Fallen Apple's flavor is rounder and bolder than a typical hard cider, with notes of caramel and oak. Suggested pairings from the Night Shift crew: pork chops, meatloaf. Yes, please.

WINE Russell Orchards' Baldwin Apple ($10)
All the wine is made on premises at this popular Ipswich orchard (pro tip: get the cider donuts). Their Baldwin variety is made from the title apple, a red late-bloomer (best picked in mid-to-late October) with a sweet, crisp flavor. The apples are crushed and pressed prior to fermentation; the result is a dry apple wine with a tart kick. For a sweeter take on the seasonal vino, sample the apple blueberry or blackberry apple wines while you're there.

Where to buy it? Russell Orchords, 143 Argilla Rood, Ipswich

MEAD Moonlight Meadery's Kurt's Apple Pie Mead ($17)
The word "mead" might bring to mind images of burly Vikings hoisting brimming horns of some ancient elixir, but it merits the modern imbiber's attention. Made by fermenting honey with water and, if desired, various spices and fruits—here, apple—mead is a rich, bittersweet brew. One of the New Hampshire meadery's top sellers, this variety is on the sweeter end of the spectrum and incorporates local apple cider into the mix, spiced with cinnamon and Madagascar Bourbon vanilla. We'll raise a horn to that.

Where to buy it? The Urban Grape, 303 Columbus Ave., Boston

APERITIF Eden Ice Cider's Orleans Herbal Aperitif Cider ($32)
Long, cold winters can be a bummer, but they're a boon for this aperitif, made from fresh-pressed juice that is stored outdoors for weeks at a stretch in the frigid New England temps. The resulting concentrate is then fermented and infused with Vermont-grown herbs, including organic basil and anise, making for a delicate pre-dinner palate opener. Try serving it over ice, with a twist of lime, or in cocktails, to taste.

Where to buy it? The Urban Grope, 303 Columbus Ave., Boston

Good Eats: Follow the Cheesecake

Cheesecake might seem like a plain old slice of Americana, but the version at the South End's highly anticipated Cafe Madeleine derives from traditional French technique—and just might upstage any baked version in the city. Chef/owner Frédéric Robert, who once famously partnered with kitchen demigod Alain Ducasse, cooks the dessert in a bain-marie (translation: heated water bath) on the stove for eight hours, painstakingly topping off the water level as needed to maintain a just-so sub-simmer. The result: a lush, ultra-velvety custard atop a rich homemade shortbread crust. / Elizabeth Bomze

SMALL-BATCH INDEED: The French Laundry, Per Se and the Inn at Little Washington are the only other restaurants to stock this stuff.

Purveyors: Dairy Queen

Animal Farm, animalfarmvt.com

At Vermont's Animal Farm, Diane St. Clair hand-churns small-batch butter the color of pure gold. Almost as precious as the real thing, it's found in only five restaurants worldwide, including Barbara Lynch's No. 9 Park and Menton. The latter welcomed the fragrant butter just last month, and it was a long time coming. Lynch first trekked to the farm a decade ago, cooked dinner for St. Clair and sealed a deal to bring the butter to No. 9; a dedicated Jersey cow had to be added to meet the demand. After several male calves, that cow finally had a heifer, who's now producing Menton's butter. Her name? Babette ("Little Barbara"), naturally. "If Barbara opens new restaurants," St. Clair says with a laugh, "I'll have to build another barn." / Jacqueline Houton

COMMUTER CRIMES AND KUDOS

DEAR DOGGONE TIRED: According to the MBTA, "During off-peak hours, non-service dogs are allowed at the discretion of T vehicle operators. Dogs must be properly leashed and are not allowed to annoy riders or take up a seat." Sometimes I wish the last sentence could be applied to human riders, too. None of us dog owners go around with the intent of pissing you off—though with an attitude like yours, I'd love to see you get pissed on. However, for the sake of civility on both sides, you might just ask nicely if both dog and owner would mind standing farther away. As a rule, we don't want to be around you any more than you want to be around us.

—Dog mama

TO THE BIKER BABE: In the Fenway, I rode up and said, "I like your bike." It was the blue version of my Jamis Coda in red. A sushi delivery guy pedaled in the wrong direction down Boylston Street, a rubber pigeon bobbing atop his helmet. You'd never seen anything like that—was it real? The light changed. We said goodbye, me without the sense to ask, "Would you go for a ride with a ridiculously older man?"

—Rider regrets

DEAR GRAY SAAB DRIVER AT THE SOMERVILLE GULF: I left you plenty of room to back out around me, so it's inaccurate to call me lazy because I wouldn't back my car out into traffic. I'm not lazy, but even if I was, I'd rather fix that because you're going to be a confrontational a--hole for the rest of your life.

—Zipcar driver

TO THE SUPERWOMAN WHO CARRIED ME HOME AFTER I SPRAINED MY ANKLE ON A RUN IN BACK BAY: First, clearly you drink your milk. Second, from the bottom of my heart, thank you. There is nothing quite like strangers helping strangers to restore your faith in humanity. And I apologize for getting sweat on your beautiful outfit.
